1931—1935

VOLUME II

DACOITY. See PENAL CODE, SS. 395 AND 396.

DAMAGES. See also (1) CONTRACT ACT, S. 73.
(2) TORT.

———Anticipatory breach of contract—Date of performance as the material point of time.

Where a contract is for delivery of goods on a certain day and the defendant repudiates the contract before that date, damages must be assessed on the basis of the market rate prevailing on the due date of delivery and not on the basis of the rate prevailing on the date of the repudiation. (Brown, J.) MAUNG PO KYAW v. SAW TAGO. 150 I.C. 760=I.R. 1933 Rang. 42 A.I.R. 1933 Rang. 25

———Assault—Costs of criminal prosecution, if recoverable

Costs incurred in the criminal prosecution cannot be recovered as part of damages or compensation for an assault. (Jai Lal, J.) LAHORI v. RAM CHAND. I.R. 1931 Lah 911=134 I C. 207=32 P.L R 421=A.I R. 1931 Lah 648 (1).

———Breach of contract—Acceptance of repudiation—Measure of damages.

The plaintiffs alleged that they were instructed to purchase linseed as defendants' brokers, that the defendants repudiated the contract, that the plaintiffs accepted the repudiation and that they were entitled to damages at the market rate prevailing on the date of repudiation. It was contended by the defendants that in order that the plaintiffs may be entitled to damages, it was necessary for them to show that at the due date they had as brokers dealt with third parties in the market and suffered loss on that basis.

Held, the plaintiffs were entitled to accept the repudiation and claim damages on the then prevailing rate without showing that they continued to act as agents even after the repudiation. (Beaumont, C.J and Mirza, J.) RATAN LAL v. BRIJ MOHAN. I R. 1931 Bom. 445 (2)=133 I C. 861 (2)=33 Bom L.R 703=A.I R. 1931 Bom. 386.

———Breach of contract of sale of land by buyer—Damages—Assessment of—Principle to be applied.

The principle as to the measure of damages in the case of a breach of contract of sale of goods is not applicable to contracts relating to land; in the latter case the principle adopted by the Common Law Courts in England must come into play; the plaintiff is entitled to have his damages assessed at the pecuniary amount of the difference between the state of the plaintiff upon the breach of the contract and what it would have been if the contract had been performed. (Niyogi, A. J. C.) MOTILAL v. SETH JAMNADAS. 31 N L R. (Supp.) 101=162 I.C. 944=8 R.N. 293=18 N.L.J 313=A.I R. 1936 Nag. 4.

———Cause of action—Satisfaction of decree—Subsequent improper execution — Damages — Claim to—Nature & liability—Enforceability by third party.

The liability of a decree holder, who executes a decree even after receiving satisfaction, is not one in tort; the true basis of a claim for damages by any one injured by the improper execution proceeding can only be that it is a breach of an implied agreement not to execute the decree; and such a claim for damages against the decree-holder is not available to a private alienee of the properties after attachment and prior to the sale in execution, who is not party to the contract not to execute. (Varadachariar, J.) PAPPU REDDIAR v. PICHU AYYAR. 161 I.C. 963=8 R.M. 901=42 L.W. 435=1935 M.W.N. 898=A.I R. 1935 Mad. 961.

———Conversion—Measure of damages.

The measure of damages in an action for trover is the value of the goods. According to the circumstances the general damages may be a substantial sum or may be a nominal sum, but there may be additional special damages given besides the actual value of the goods if the damages sustained are held not to be too remote. (Wort, J.) SITARAM SHAM NARAYAN v. ISWARI CHARAN SARANGI. 154 I.C. 198=7 R.P. 442=A.I.R. 1934 Pat. 57.

———Conversion — Wrongful intermingling of goods by defendant—Measure of damages. See EVIDENCE ACT, S. 106. 11 Pat L T. 702.

———Divorce proceedings. See DIVORCE ACT, S. 34.

———Exemplary damages—Deliberate assault and loss of eye sight—Quantum of damages.

Where owing to a deliberate and wanton assault by the defendant, the plaintiff loses his eye-sight and has suffered considerable pain and loss of earning and he files a suit for damages, substantial and exemplary damages should be awarded. The principles which guide the Courts in estimating damages in a case of this kind are as follows:—The injured person is entitled to damages for personal suffering and for loss of enjoyment of life and also to actual pecuniary loss resulting to and the expenses reasonably incurred by him. If he is engaged in a profession, trade or other occupation, he must be compensated for the probable future loss by reason of incapacity or diminished capacity to work. 38 Bom. 552, Ref. (Jai Lal and Abdul Rashid, JJ.) GURDIT SINGH v. FAKIR CHAND. 6 I.R. (Lah.) 20 = 144 I.C. 729 = 34 P.L.R. 783 = A.I R. 1933 Lah. 761.

———Exemplary damages—Principle.

Exemplary damages are awarded, rather to express indignation at the defendant's wrong than as representing the plaintiff's loss. (Venkatasubba Rao and Pakenham Walsh, JJ.) VENKATAPPAYYA v. RAMA KRISTNAMMA. I.R 1932 Mad. 187 = 135 I.C. 619 = 34 L.W. 898 = A.I.R. 1932 Mad. 53 = 62 M.L J. 107.

———Exemplary damages—Wanton and malicious trespass on land—Principles. See TORT—TRESPASS ON LAND. 69 M.L.J 98.

———General and special—Mode of pleading.

Special damages must be specially pleaded. General damages have to be claimed as a separate and distinct item, but it is enough to claim them in a lump sum without any particulars. General damages are defined as 'matters which cannot be stated in money or money by worth' and include such things as bodily or mental suffering, loss of reputation in the like. Special damages have to be specifically proved general do not. (Bose, A. J. C.) DAMODHAR v. VISHWANATH. I R. 1933 Nag. 19 = 141 I.C. 58 = 28 Nag L.R. 320 = A.I.R. 1933 Nag. 29.

———Injunction—Restraint on alienation or disposal of properties—Reflection on character and prejudice to business stability—Suit for damages—Maintainability.

The appellant had obtained an injunction against the respondent restraining the latter from disposing of or alienating any of the movable or immovable properties. The injunction was in force for a month and then dissolved. In the present proceedings, the respondent claimed damages caused to him by reason of the operation of the injunction. He alleged that the injunction was a reflection upon his character and upon his business capacity and in consequence thereof, he lost the benefit of contracts with third persons who lost faith in his credit.

Held, that in order to claim damages, the respondent must show that he had suffered loss by his inability to do one or more of the things which the injunction restrained him from doing, and that the allegations made by him were insufficient to found a claim to damages. (Rankin, C.J. and C.C. Ghose, J.) JOHAR MULL CHIMANLAL & CO. v. ISWARDAS AGARWALLA. 59 Cal. 1082 = I R. 1932 Cal. 636 = 139 I.C. 515 = 36 C.W.N. 323 = A.I.R. 1932 Cal. 695.

———Interest—When allowed.

Interest cannot be granted on damages in the absence of proof of any mercantile usage or agreement to that effect. (Percival, J.C. and Wild, A.J.C.) PREMCHAND GANOMAL v. NEWANDMAL BHIRUMAL. 25 S.L.R. 104 = I.R. 1931 Sind 141 = 134 I.C. 397 = A.I.R. 1931 Sind 121.

———Interest—Suit for value of articles entrusted with defendant.

In a suit to recover the value of certain articles entrusted with the defendant, interest cannot be allowed on the amount decreed, as it will be tantamount to awarding damages upon damages. (Wazir Hasan, C.J. and Raza, J.) BRIJ NATH SHARGHA v. LAKSHMI NARAIN KAUL. 8 Luck. 35 = I.R. 1932 Oudh 228 = 137 I.C. 217 = 9 O.W.N. 239 = A.I.R. 1932 Oudh 165.

DAMAGES.

———Legal damage — Mortification due to legal search.

Though no doubt it is very mortifying to be searched in the public street, and though the police approached the house and the rumour got about that plaintiff's house was going to be searched, still the plaintiff cannot be said to have suffered any loss or damage, which the law could recognize where the Police Officer acted legally and bona fide. That a criminal case for misappropriation was proceeding against a person would be a very good reason why he could not obtain service, as employers would naturally be chary of engaging a man against whom there were allegations of misappropriations and breach of trust, and therefore such a person would be entitled in suit for malicious prosecution for damages for loss of service, if any, for the period during which the criminal proceedings lasted. ———Measure of—Trade mark—Infringement of—Plaintiff's loss and defendant's profits.

In trade mark case, the plaintiff is entitled, if he succeeds in getting an injunction, either to claim the damage sustained from the defendant's wrongful act or the profit which the defendant might have made by his wrongful act. The computation in the two cases is not the same. The proper way to approach the question as to how much damage the plaintiffs had suffered by reason of the infringement of their mark by the defendants is to ascertain what profit the plaintiffs would have made if the offending articles had not been upon the market and the best evidence in support of such a claim is evidence of any loss of trade that the plaintiff had suffered during the period in which the defendants were importing goods with the infringing mark on them, 51 All. 182 (P.C.), Ref. (Page, C.J. and Das, J.) SALLAY MAHOMED HAJEE SULAIMAN v. NEOGI & CO. 10 Rang. 85=I.R. 1932 Rang. 92=137 I.C. 202=A.I.R. 1932 Rang. 56.

——Prospective damages—Decree for damages for physical injury—Direction to determine prospective damages in execution — Legality—Jurisdiction of execution Court.

Where a suit is brought for damages on account of physical injury sustained by the plaintiff from the wrongful act of the defendant, it is within the jurisdiction of the Court to award damages for the injury which the plaintiff has suffered up to date and also to pass a decree for prospective damages, i.e., damages which would include probable and future injury which would result to the plaintiff. Such prospective damages must be ascertained and awarded at the time of the trial. The C.P. Code following the English Procedure on the point contemplates that a decree for damages should be final and should state the full amount of damages to be granted. It is only in the case of mesne profits that there is an exception to this rule. The Court has, therefore, no jurisdiction to make any enquiry in execution as to the amount of prospective damages after the case has been decreed. The fact that the decree directs that the matter would be taken up in execution proceeding cannot invest the execution Court with jurisdiction which is not given to it by the Code or by any other law and, therefore, the execution Court is barred from adopting that procedure. ——Special damage—Obstruction to highway—Immediate access to private property—Blocking of.

The rule requiring special damage in cases of obstruction to a public highway is qualified in cases where the plaintiff complains of an interference with his beneficial enjoyment of property thereby. A right of immediate access from private property to public highway or vice versa is a private right distinct from the rights of the owner of the property to use the highway itself as one of the public, the violation or infringement of which would furnish a cause of action in respect of an obstruction on the public way, without any further proof of special damage. ——Trespass—Measure of damages—Depreciation in selling value as the basis.

In respect of injury done to land by trespass, the measure of damages is the depreciation in the selling value of the land, not the amount required to put the premises in repair. ——Trespass—Suit for use and occupation—Maintainability.

The action for use and occupation is founded in the English Common Law upon a permission, expressed or implied, giving rise to a presumption that a reasonable compensation for the use of the premises has been agreed upon between the parties; so that the action is not, according to English authorities, maintainable against a wilful trespasser who sets up a tenancy for a third person claiming adversely to the plaintiff. ———Promissory note—Suit against one legal representative of deceased executant—Other legal representatives added after limitation—Effect of.

A creditor is no doubt entitled to a simple money decree against the legal representatives of a deceased executant of a promissory note, and to realize that decree from his assets. But if more than one person is in possession of those assets, every one of those persons is, to the extent to which he is in possession of the assets, a legal representative of the deceased. The mere fact that one of them is impleaded as a defendant within time could not warrant the passing of a decree against the others who are not made defendants till the period of limitation for the suit expires. The decree that is passed against the legal representative who is impleaded in time is confined in its operation to the assets, if any, of the deceased in his hands, and the assets in the possession of the others could not be disturbed in execution of that decree. ———Remedy—Promissory note for loan—Effect—Suit on debt—Maintainability.

The giving of a negotiable security by the debtor to the creditor operates only as a conditional payment and not as satisfaction of debt, unless the parties agree to treat it so ; and such conditional payment is liable to be defeated on non-payment at maturity. If the instrument given by the debtor is itself the consideration for the loan, or if it is accepted as accord and satisfaction of the original debt, the lender is restricted to his rights under the instrument, and he must stand or fall by it. But if it is agreed between the parties that the instrument is merely a collateral security for the re-payment of the loan, the lender has a right to sue on the original consideration, independently of the security and without regard to his rights under the instrument. If a creditor holding security sues for his debt, he is under an obligation on payment of the debt to hand over the security and if having improperly made away with the security, he is unable to return it to his debtor, he cannot have judgment for the debt. As a general rule the situs of a debt is the residence of the debtor but there is either a parallel rule of validity or at any rate an exception to be found in situating the debt in the place where it is properly payable. The principal S employed the agent O to enter into executory contracts of purchase and sale for him both in Indore and in Bombay. The agent's head place of business was in Indore. Separate accounts were kept in Indore and Bombay and the transactions were kept distinct. S, who was employed at the Court of Indore, was in the habit of giving orders for his Bombay account in Indore where they were transmitted if necessary at his expense by telegram to Bombay, and made and received payments in respect of the Bombay account in Indore. The agent was under liability at any time to account to the principal for his transactions, and to pay to the principal any balance due on such accounting.

Held, that the accounting would in ordinary circumstances take place in Indore where the head office of the agent, was, and where both parties resided. It would not be part of the obligation of the agent that he should have to pay to the principal sums due on one account without setting against them sums due to the agent on another account. There being no sole or primary obligation to pay in Bombay, and no exclusive right to suit in Bombay, and both parties being resident in Indore, the debt was situate in Indore. (Lord Atkin.) CHATURBHUJ PIRAMAL v. CHUNILAL OOMKARMAL. 60 I.A. 211=57 Bom. 474=I R. 1933 P C. 145=37 C.W.N. 825=1933 M.W.N. 705=57 C.L J 487=1933 A.I. Subsequently P was adjudicated an insolvent on his property vested in the Official Receiver. S put forward his claim as a creditor and contended that qua the sum of Rs. 10,000 he was in equity entitled to be subrogated to the Bank.

Mesne profits.

———Construction—Mesne profits—Co-sharer in possession of entire land as lessee of the others—Compensation in lieu of mesne profits subsequent to the institution of suit—Power of Court to award.

A co sharer was in possession of the entire land in his capacity as a co-sharer and as lessee of the other co-sharers. On the expiry of the lease, the other co-sharers brought a suit for joint possession and mesne profits and a decree was passed in their favour. Subsequently the decree was modified by disallowing joint possession and though compensation was allowed in lieu of mesne profits, the decree did not specify the period over which the payment of compensation was to extend.

Held, as a matter of construction of the decree, the compensation was intended to continue from the expiration of the lease just so long as the payment of mesne profits would have continued had the original decree with reference to them remained in force. So as the co-sharer had throughout remained in possession the plaintiffs would be entitled to compensation, till the expiry of three years from the date of the decree. Although, as a general rule, the court has no jurisdiction to give plaintiffs a decree in respect of a cause of action, that had not accrued to them at the date of the institution of their suit and the plaintiffs are not entitled to a decree for compensation in respect of a period subsequent to the institution of their suit. Held, that it was the intention of the decree that the tenants should be in occupation so long as they paid Jama in accordance with the practice prevalent in the Shahi days and that it was not intended that the land could be resumed at the option of the taluqdar or that the taluqdar could charge an exhorbitant rent. ———Executability—Decree merely declaratory or executable—Test.

The test to see whether a decree is an executable one or is merely declaratory is whether there is a direct order against any one or whether the decree merely deelares rights and obligations on the part of any one. After sale of attached property, the judgment-debtor preferred objection that the decree was void and could not be executed. The parties had referred their dispute to arbitration out of Court. An award was delivered in pursuance thereof which effected mortgage of judgment-debtor's property of one house for Rs. 3,000 to be paid by the mortgagee decree holder; the mortgage was to be with possession for a period of a year and a half to be counted from date of the award. Arrangment as regards repayment of mortgage-money was also laid down. The award was filed and a decree was passed incorporating the terms of the award. The Mortgagee-decree-holder took out execution of this decree and prayed for recovery of his mortgage-money with certain item due for rent by sale of the mortgaged property.

———Partition decree—Final determination of rights—Execution of decree—Permissibility.

By a compromise petition in a partition suit, it was agreed that the shares should be decided by the Court and that certain named arbitrators should proceed to allot the properties by metes and bounds. This was done and it was accepted by all parties. Pending these proceedings, one of the defendants died and a dispute arose among them as to the proportion in which the deceased defendant's share was to be divided. Then a deed of settlement was drawn up to which all the members alive were parties and which dealt with not only the share of the deceased member but also all other matters outstanding between them. After this, a final decree for partition was passed. Subsequently the decree in the partition suit was sought to be executed.

DECREE—Setting aside.

———Setting aside—Ex-parte decree set aside in subsequent suit—Whether original suit revives.

As to whether, when an ex parte decree is set aside in a subsequent suit, the original suit in which that decree was obtained is revived or not, depends upon the pleadings, the issues and the actual decision in the subsequent suit. If, upon an issue properly raised and tried in the subsequent suit, it is held that the claim itself of the plaintiff in the original suit was false and fraudulent, the effect of such a decision is to put an end to the original suit which cannot be revived and retried. If, on the other hand, the ex parte decree is set aside on the ground that it was obtained by suppression of summons by means of fraud and the defendant in the original suit was prevented from appearing in the suit and defending it by reason of fraud committed by the plaintiff, the first suit is revived and the plaintiff of that suit is entitled to have it tried and disposed of in accordance with law, though in the subsequent suit the Court might have arrived at the conclusion that the plaintiff's claim was false as incidental to its finding of fraudulent suppression of summons (Jwala Prasad, Wort, and Kulwant Sahay, JJ.) NIRSAN SINGH v. KISHUN SINGH. 10 Pat 516=I.R. 1931 Pat 275=132 I.C. 355=12 Pat.L.T. 493=A.I.R. 1931 Pat. 204 (2) (F.B.).

———Setting aside—Form of action.

Whenever a party to a prior decree wants relief to the effect that he is in no way bound by the prior decree, he should ask for the setting aside of the prior decree. ———Setting aside—Fraud.

In a suit to set aside a compromise-decree in a partition suit on the ground of fraud, the only issue for the court is to see if the plaintiff has or has not established the allegation of fraud. ———Setting aside—Fraud.

When a party obtains a decree in a suit in which the defendant is ex parte by deliberately putting forward a false case before the Court, by suppressing a fact which it was his duty to disclose and thereby misleading the Court, that decree can be set aside on the ground that it was vitiated by fraud. The mere fact that the decree has been obtained by perjury is not a sufficient ground for setting it aside but if a false claim is made, false to the knowledge of the plaintiff and a decree obtained by means of a fraud practised on the Court, the Court has jurisdiction in a sub equent suit to set aside the decree. The fraud, necessary to set aside the decree, must be actual positive fraud, a meditated and intentional contrivance to keep the parties and the Court in ignorance of the real facts of the case and thereby obtaining a decree. 38 Mad. 203; 41 Mad. 743; 21 L.W. 300; 16 C.W.N. 1002; 56 I.C. 607; 37 All. 535; 41 Cal. 990 Dist; 18 C.W.N. 447; 63 I C. 712 and 23 I.C. 976, Foll. ———Setting aside—Fraud—Correctness of endorsements on processes disputed—Duty to examine process-server.

In a suit to set aside an ex parte decree on the ground of fraud, if the execution of processes in accordance with the endorsements on them is disputed, the plaintiff should ordinarily examine the server of the process in question and the attestors of the endorsement thereon, who alone could give the best evidence on the matter. ———Setting aside—Fraud—Decree obtained in suit upon mortgage already discharged.

To bring a suit upon a discharged mortgage bond is to commit a fraud upon the Court and such fraud is extrinsic to the proceedings in the suit brought on such mortgage bond. ———Setting aside—Fraud—Fraud of co-defendant to which plaintiff was not a party—Not sufficient.

The plaintiff brought a suit to set aside an ex parte decree passed against him and another (the First defendant in the previous suit) in favour of the first defendant (plaintiff in the previous suit). He alleged that in that suit, the plaintiff (the first defendant herein) and the second defendant, the only contesting party in the prior suit, had colluded and fraudulently consented to a decree operating to the prejudice of the present plaintiff.

Held, that the plaintiff having remained ex parte, he could not have been defrauded in any way by the first defendant; that if the second defendant in the previous suit had by means of any representation induced the plaintiff to remain ex parte and fraudulently consented to a decree, the first defendant was not responsible for it and so the ex parte decree could not be set aside. ———Setting aside—Fraud—Non-service of summons on defendant—Plaintiff not taking part in service.

If a plaintiff in an action gives a wrong address of the defendant and takes no part in serving the summons on the defendant, the giving of the wrong address by itself would not prevent the defendant from appearing before the Court to defend the suit. The plaintiff cannot under those circumstances be charged with having deliberately suppressed the service of summons or having obtained an ex parte decree by fraud even though he might have had some cause for suspecting that the service effected on the defendant might not have been good service. ———Setting aside—Fraud—Particulars of fraud to be clearly specified.

In a suit to set aside a decree on the ground that it was obtained by fraud, the plaintiff is bound to specify in his plaint the facts which constitute the fraud in a clear and definite manner. In order to entitle the plaintiff to succeed, the fraud alleged must be satisfactorily established and it must be proved how, when, where, and in what way the fraud was committed, since a prior judgment cannot be upset on general allegations of fraud or collusion. ———Setting aside—Fraud—Unpaid vendor suing for purchase money omitting to state possession of goods.

DEDICATION.

One well-established test of whether an order or decree is nullity or a mere irregularity is it open to the parties against whom the decree or order is passed to waive objection to it? 35 Cal 61 (P. C.) Foll. A judgment-debtor who was arrested in execution of the decree was released on condition he furnished security under S. 55 (4), C. P. Code. The judgment-debtor furnished surety who executed a surety bond which, however, was not in accordance with S. 55 (4) and under which he only undertook that the judgment debtor would file insolvency application and that he as surety could produce the judgment-debtor in Court on the date to be fixed by the Court. No objection was raised by the decree-holder to the bond and after producing the judgment-debtor on the date fixed, the surety applied for cancellation of the bond. The Court accordingly discharged him.

———Construction—Agreement to finance litigation—Suit on—Plea of want of authority—Proof of authority.

A suit was to be conducted by B against her brother and for this she sought help of A, who consented to help her. Whereupon a document was drawn up in two parts, by the terms of which A was to contribute one-quarter of the costs of the litigation, and in the event of failure, to pay one-quarter of any costs that might be awarded to the other side, and in return B was to make over to him one-quarter of whatever she might recover. One part was executed by A and the other by the husband of B in her name. B succeeded in her suit and A was put in possession of 13 acres of land by the husband of B. But quarrels ensued whereupon A brought the suit to enforce the agreement. B set up want of authority to the execution of document by her husband.

Held, that though a genuine thumb print of B on the document might in the present case be unimpeachable evidence of her authorization, it was not essential to the validity of the document. Authority or no authority is a question of fact, and may be proved in various ways, it might be a legitimate deduction from the circumstances under which the transaction took place, and on the evidence the document was executed by B. A person agreed to purchase standing timber in certain jungle for a certain consideration and executed a document which he called kabuliyat (counterpart of lease) under which he promised to pay the price in a lump sum on a certain date and in case of default, he agreed that the owner of the timber would have the right to realize the amount from him. He further promised to have the wood of the said jungle cut and removed within a year.

Held, that the transaction was one of sale of goods or merchandise and the deed was an agreement or memorandum of agreement evidencing such sale, and was exempt from stamp duty under Sch. I, Art. 5 of the Stamp Act. The mere fact that beyond the stipulation as to a sale of goods there was an agreement that in case a rival proprietor raised any objection to the cutting of timber and removal of the same, the vendor was to have the responsibility did not in any way detract from the character of the agreement. ———Construction—Gift—Absolute or limited interest—Settlement deed by Hindu—Powers of donee—Appointment to office of shebaitship.

The Court in construing the intentions of a Hindu donor must bear in mind that the form of expression or the literal sense is not to be so much regarded as the real meaning of the parties. A gift is absolute when by such gift an interest or ownership is created, entitling the donee to deal with the subject of the gift according to pleasure and conferring upon him an uncontrollable power of alienation, either by deed, gift or will, Where there is a gift of shebaitship not limited in any way but equally capable of being construed as a gift for life or an absolute gift and it is followed by a general power of appointment and a gift over in default of appointment, the first gift should be treated as an absolute gift unless the whole frame of the will suggests otherwise.

Held the true intention of the deed was to confer the shebaitship in absolute right to H, with power to him to appoint his successor at any time he pleased, and should he not exercise that power, to leave the shebaitship to be inherited by his heirs, but with a condition restricting such inheritance to the eldest descendant to the exclusion of others.

Held, further, that the clause in that in the absence of such appointment, the shebaitship devolved on the eldest son to the exclusion of other heirs was invalid and that condition did not affect the gift in favour of H, what was an absolute gift of the shebait in his favour and the heirs of H, the original donee, in the line of inheritance as under the Hindu Law, were entitled to the office. ———Construction—Gift by a Hindu in favour of his wife—Nature of estate.

It is well settled that considerations governing the construction of one particular document cannot be of much help in construing another document and as such judicial decisions dealing with the interpretation of documents are by no means an infallible guide when the construction of a particular document is in question. But there are certain principles peculiar to transfers in favour of Hindu females that cannot be lost sight of. Where the transfer is in favour of a Hindu wife who ordinarily gets an estate for life under the Hindu Law, and an heritable estate is not by express words tranferred to her and a restraint on the donee's power of alienation is put by express words in the deed, the facts clearly indicate that the donor intended to transfer only a life-estate in the property gifted by the deed. DEED—Construction—Gift.

———Construction—Gift by stranger to members of joint family—Gift expressed to be made in favour of each of the donees individually—Donees take as tenants-in-common.

Where a deed of gift executed by a person in favour of the defendants, stated as follows:—"Out of you G is my brother-in law, P is my nephew and R is the son of my another nephew. Therefore out of affection I bear towards you, I have conveyed to you the immovable property described, in the schedule below worth Rs. 10,000 and I have delivered possession of the same to you now alone. Therefore, from this date forwards, you and your heirs should enjoy permanently the said property with absolue rights with water, trees, stones, treasure and hidden treasure standing thereon. But I, my heirs and my relations have nothing to do with the same. I shall get the pattas from the said land transferred in your name, when you desire. You yourself should pay sircar cists payable on the said land. G out of you should keep the said property in his possession till his death and preserve the said property without causing any damage to it. One need not raise any dispute with the other in respect of the same. This is the dakhal (conveyance) deed of immovable property executed and given with my consent."

Held, that the deed should be construed as a whole; since the gift was made by a person who was in the position of a stranger to the donees and stated to be made in favour of each one of them, and further the donees and their heirs were asked to enjoy the properties, the donor intended the donees to take the properties as tenants in common even though they were members of a joint family and even though it was stated that the 1st defendant was to keep possession till his death. A father tranferred by means of a tamliknama his half share in certain ancestral villages in favour of his minor son. The document recited that the donor was heavily indebted, that most of the debts were fictitious, and that his wife, the guardian of his minor son, had expressed her willingness to pay off his debts. There was no mention of any specific debts in the document. A creditor, in a suit brought by him impugned the deed of gift, on the ground that it had been executed to defraud creditors and obtained a declaration to that effect. Further, after the execution of the deed in question, the donor renewed his promissory note in favour of the creditor. In a suit based on the promissory note, it was contended that the tamliknama created a charge in favour of the creditor in respect of the debt in suit.

Held, that the tamliknama did not create any charge in favour of the plaintiff in respect of the debt in suit, which conclusion is also borne out by the subsequent conduct of the donor as well as of the plaintiff. It was held by the High Court that the liability of the sureties was contingent not merely on the failure of the principal debtor but also on the realization of the security specified in the opening clause.

Held, that there was nothing in Cl. (3) or Cl. M granted a mining lease of certain premises to L. The royalties were charged upon the lease-hold interest. By the same deed, M also mortgaged the premises to L to secure a loan taken. ———Construction—Mortgage or lease—"Khanda gutta Cowle"—Provision for repayment of advance by annual cists—Absence of provision for interest.

Under a document called a "khandagutta cowle," land described as a carpenter's service inam was put in possession of a person who advanced Rs. 693 in consideration thereof. The person who advanced the money was to be in possession for a period of 33 years and the amount of Rs. 693 advanced under the deed was to carry no interest and was to be extinguished by a cist or rent of Rs. 21 per annum, which for 33 years would amount to the sum of Rs. 693. It was recited in the body of the document that the land had been mortgaged.

Held, that the document was a lease for a fixed premium and not a mortgage, and that whatever the word "khandagutta" might mean, 'cowle" ordinarily denoted a lease and not a mortgage. 25 A. 115 (P.C.), Foll. Where a person executed a document whereby he purported to sell the property in consideration of the loan due by the executant but it was agreed that if the executant paid the money within three years the property would be 'released' (wi guzasht kara lengen).

Held, that the transaction fell within the language of S. 58 (c), T. P. Act, and the transaction did not amount to an out and out sale but it was a mortgage. ———Construction—Mortgage or sale—Considerations to be taken into account.

In every case in which the plaintiff sues upon the ground that a certain transaction, though in the form of a mortgage, was in fact a sale, the Court must decide as to the real nature of the transaction upon all the available material, including the terms of the document itself, the onus being in the first instance on the plaintiff to establish his case and the true question being as to the real intention of the parties when entering into the transaction. If it is established beyond reasonable doubt, that the parties intended a permanent transfer, the Court will find the transaction to be one of sale though the deed is in the form of a mortgage. Where a document was described as a mortgage deed and the rent of the property was to be set-off towards a portion of the debt while the other portion was to carry interest, and there were stipulations against increase of rent, and for payment of money spent on improvements with interest and the deed further provided that the mortgagors were not liable for the debt either personally or out of their other property, held, that the transaction was a mortgage and not a sale. The fact that some of the stipulations therein were of an onerous character was not sufficient to throw any doubt on the real nature of the transaction. 100 P.R. 1895, Rel. on. The fact that the stamp on which the sale deed was engrossed was purchased by the vendor is inconclusive to determine whether transaction is a sale or mortgage. The former were under the erroneous belief that the latter were also entitled to a share in the estate, though in law the adopted son of the latter had no rights, as he had been invalidly adopted.

Held, the widow of the last male holder and her son were not divesting themselves of any part of their estate, but only acted on the supposition that they held only a joint interest in the estate and that they were relinquishing what in law they were bound to relinquish in the belief, that the other widow and her adopted son were members of the coparcenary and were as such entitled to partition. ———Construction — Partition deed in Malabar tarwad—Sharers taking absolute estate—Residuary clause providing for survivorship in respect of undisposed of properties—Will by sharer—Validity.

Four members of a Malabar tarwad, two brothers, a sister and a nephew, effected a partition of their properties by a deed under which the properties were divided into four shares, and one of the terms of the deed provided: "The respective sharers shall enjoy the property belonging to their respective shares with absolute rights such as purchase, sale, etc., and by effecting improvements as they please, getting pattas, and paying tirwa to the sircar, etc." It was also stipulated that thereafter one sharer shall have no manner of right, interest, title or entry in the entire property allotted to the other sharer and that if any one sharer died while enjoying his share as he pleased as aforesaid, and if any properties of the deceased sharer were left behind, such properties shall devolve in equal shares on the others "out of us living at the time". One of the brothers subsequently executed a will bequeathing certain properties to his wife and children, and after his death, the other sharers challenged the bequest and claimed all his properties by right of survivorship as per the arrangement in the deed.

Held, that the words "purchase and sale" in the partition deed were analogous to technical terms describing an absolute estate, and that the deceased sharer was competent to dispose of his property by will and consequently only his undisposed of property devolved on the other sharers in equal shares.

There is no principle of construction, which permits a document contrary to its actual wording to be read, as though it followed a proposed precedent unless between the parties it has been rectified or at least is such as would by the Court be rectified. The question at issue was whether the acting manager of the defendant Bank had the authority to certify cheques drawn by a constituent as good for payment on a future day. The plaintiff sought to read the word "accept" into the power-of-attorney suggesting that it had been omitted owing to the copyist's mistake.

Held, that such a construction was not permissible. The general words in the later clauses of the power-of-attorney should be read with the special powers given in the earlier clauses and cannot be construed so as to enlarge the restricted powers there mentioned.

Held, further, that the power to "endorse" did not confer the power to "back" bills on behalf of the Bank and that the power to pay cheques did not include the power to "promise to pay." ———Construction—Power-of-attorney—Provision for representation of principal in Court proceedings—If confers power to sign and verify income-tax returns.

An interpreting a power-of-attorney, the words contained therein must be looked at in connection with the context, as well as with the general object of the power. A power-of-attorney must be strictly construed as giving only such authority as it confers expressly or by necessary implication. Where a mukhtarnama executed by an assessee confers authority on the mukhtar to file suits in Courts, Board of Revenue and other Government departments and also to file applications, plaints, written statements and affidavits filed in support of applications, the general object of the power is that the agent should be able to represent his principal in proceedings in Court so as to dispense with the necessity of the principal appearing personally It does not confer any authority to sign or verify a return of income of the assessee under S. 22 (2) of the Income-tax Act. Although the words "other Government departments" are sufficiently wide to include the department of income-tax, the return of income cannot be regarded as an application or a written statement within the meaning of the terms of the mukhtar. It is a rule of construction applicable to all written instruments, that the instrument must be construed as a whole in order to ascertain the true meaning of several clauses and the words of each clause must be so interpreted as to bring them into harmony with the other provisions of the instrument. If that interpretation does no violence to the meaning of which they are naturally susceptible, the best construction of deeds is to make one part of the deed expound the other and so to make all parts agree and effect must as far as possible be given to every part and every word of evey clause. 54 M.L.J. 82 (P.C.), Ref. Where there are several descriptions which when evidence of surrounding facts is admitted, are not consistent one with the other, there is no general rule by which the Court can decide which description ought to prevail. There are two principles for deciding such cases. The first is that, where there is a general description given in a deed and then a particular and detailed description given, the particular description will prevail. The other principle is that where the property has been sufficiently identified in a deed and later on, an incomplete or false description is given, the later description should be disregarded on the principle that false demontratao non nocet (the first principle was applied in this particular case and the second one was held not applicable.) The following principles were applied in construing a 'karar': (1) The name given by the parties to a document is not conclusive as to its real nature and effect, though that undoubtedly is a circumstance to be taken into consideration along with the contents of the document. (2) Where the document is somewhat ambiguous and difficult to construe, the subsequent conduct of the parties can legitimately be taken into account. (3) The non mention or rights of alienation, etc., in a document would not prevent the usual legal incidents from attaching to ownership of property, in case it is found that ownership of such property passed to particular persons by virtue of the provisions of a document. language they have used, giving to that language its fair and natural meaning and construing the document as a whole. Having ascertained the intention of the parties in that manner, the Court must apply the law to the intention so ascertained. If the arrangement which the parties intended infringes wholly or in part some provision of law, then the rights of the parties must be adjusted on that basis. If the words of the deed are ambiguous, the Court may lean to a construction which produces a legal arrangement rather than one which is illegal. But the Court is never justified in giving to the language used by the parties a meaning other than that which it naturally bears in order to save the intention from being rendered invalid. ———Construction - Principles- Similar document—If reliable guide.

The language of one document does not afford much assistance in the construction of another document. Every document has to be construed according to the words used in that particular document, and a particular construction put on one document cannot be regarded as a reliable guide in the interpretation of another document. Hence the question whether the deed executed by a Hindu gives the grantor's estates to an idol subject to a charge in favour of the heirs or makes the gift to the idol a charge upon the estate, depends upon the construction of the deed as a whole. ———Construction—Religious endowment—Deed of endowment—Property to belong to Mandir in perpetuity—Expenses to be defrayed out of income—Donor declared as manager of temple—Surplus, if reserved for donor or his heirs.

The executant of the deed declared in unmistakable terms that the village, save some lands which had been or would be acquired by foreclosure in the course of money-lending business of her shop would belong to the Mandir, in perpetuity and the expenses would be defrayed out of the income thereof. The executant or her heirs and successors were to have no right to deal with the property as if it was theirs and to utilize profits thereof for their private purpose. She further declared herself to be the Sarbarakar or the manager of the temple during her lifetime and enjoined upon her successors to carry out the terms of the document.

Held, regard being had to the plain language of the document, there was hardly any room for the suggestion that it intended appropriation of the income only to upkeep of the temple reserving the surplus for the executant or her successors. (Niyogi and Staples, A J.Cs).

———Construction—Religious endowment—Office of shebait—Intention of donor—Surrounding circumstances—Relevancy of.

The directions given by the founder of a religious endowment as to how the office of the shebait is to devolve are not to be construed on the same principle as the gift of property. The most obvious distinction is that the founder of a trust is generally concerned about the fitness of the person who is to carry on the trust after his death, but no such considerations generally arise in the case of a gift to a private individual. When the intention of the donor is clearly expressed, there can obviously be no difficulty in construing the document and no extraneous evidence would be admissible for the purpose. Where, however, the words used in the document are not very clear, the intention of the executant may be construed not only in the light of the surrounding circumstances but also of such considerations as are generally present in the mind of a Hindu founder of a trust. Three deeds of trust were executed by the settlor in 1921, 1924 and 1926. The deed of 1921 gave a life-interest to the settlor and directed that after his death the trustee should, after paying Rs. 20 a month to the daughter or each of the daughters, pay the balance to the widow for life for the maintenance of herself and her children and thereafter hold the trust fund for the use and benefit of the sons or sons of the settlor in equal shares to be made over to him or them on the attainment of the age of 21 with power in meantime to the trustee to spend sums out of the income for the maintenance, etc., of such sons as the trustee deemed fit and accumulate the balance to form part of the corpus. There was also a power to the settlor to vary by will subject to certain limitations. The deed of 1924 also gave a life interest to the settlor and after making provision for payment of monthly allowance, directed the trustee to hold the rent of the estate for the use of the sons of the settlor. The other provisions in the earlier deed were repeated. The deed of 1926 also contained similar provisions.

Held, on a construction of the items of the deeds (1) that there was no resulting trust in favour of the estate of the settlor to which the heirs of the settlor were entitled subject to payment of his debts, (2) that the trustee did not hold the estate on behalf of the sons subject to the payment of his debts and liabilities; and (3) that the monthly allowance to the daughter in the deed of 1921 was invalid by reason of Ss. 14 and 15 of T. Will or gift.

———Construction—Will or gift—Deed styled "deed of partition of inheritance"—Shares to be received by each child specified—Properties to children of two former marriages transferred to them outright—Power of attorney by these children in favour of father to enjoy usufruct during his lifetime—No power to deal with corpus.

One K had three wives. K and his surviving wife S executed a "deed of partition of inheritance." The deed set out in meticulous detail the "share of inheritance" to be received by each child of the two former marriages, and the "share of inheritance" to be received by S and her children, and that all right, title and interest of the said children in and to the properties therein partitioned were thereby transferred outright to them. On the same date, the children of the two former marriages executed a power of attorney, which was also registered in favour K alone, authorizing him to manage the lands granted to them by the other deed, to retain and make use of as he liked the usufruct of these lands during K's lifetime. The power-of attorney gave him no authority to deal with the corpus of the property.

Held, that the oral evidence of intention was inadmissible under the provisions of S. 92, Evidence Act. So also the power of attorney could not be used to aid in the interpretation of the first document, which clearly amounted to a gift in presenti and not a will. The deed was not therefore invalid under the Burman Buddhist Law (Mya Bu and Dunkley, JJ.) MA SHIN v MA THIN KYI. 150 I.C. 966=7 R R. 28=A I.R. 1934 Rang. 129.

———Construction—Will or settlement—Test—Reservation of life-estate—Effect of.

A primary test of whether any particular document is a will or not is whether or not it is revocable. If it is irrevocable, then it cannot be a will. Another test is that of whether a document confers an immediate right to property. Even the reservation of a life estate by the settlement does not render the instrument the less a settlement. Where an executant of a deed of settlement of his properties on his children, stamped and registered as such, had reserved to himself possession with rights of enjoyment of some items for his maintenance but he made it clear that he was retaining no right of ownership in those items, as the document recited "I have by this document established and given you right to items 1 and 2" and went on to say that his retention of enjoyment, which was to be along with his wife, was to be "without in any circumstances incurring debts on their security" and it further set out that a right to his wife and children in those two items "has been established by the document," while as to the properties generally it recited "if the properties covered by the deed of settlement are alienated debts, etc., incurred on this security, you shall be entitled to get possession of and enjoy them as you please according to the terms of settlement after getting cancelled such alienation and security bonds".

Held, that the recitals clearly indicated that the disposition of property was to take effect at once and was irrevocable. Hence the document was not a will but a deed of settlement. Miscellaneous.

———Construction — Miscellaneous— Conditions of work contained in book of specification—Special contract executed by contractor for execution of a particular work—In case of conflict between specifications and contract, terms in contract should prevail.

The book of specifications issued by a Municipal Committee contained an offer of the conditions on which work was intended to be done by the Committee. One of the conditions therein mentioned was that no alteration or variation in the work was to be done by the contractor without the written order of the President where the value of such alteration exceeded Rs. 1,000. The plaintiff undertook a contract and the rights and obligations were embodied in a deed. One of the terms was that the Engineer-in Chief was the sole judge as regards the quality, soundness and nature of the work and that the contractor was to obey and satisfy to the minutest detail the instructions given by the Engineer in Chief. Under instructions from the Engineer, the plaintiff changed the construction from uncoursed to coursed masonry the value for which exceeded over Rs. 1,000 without the written order of the President.

Held, that the deed executed for the particular work prevailed over the specifications and that as the contractor had executed the work in accordance with the orders of the Engineer, the Committee could not escape liability on the ground that there was no written order of the President. Execution does not mean mere signing, but it means all acts necessary to make the parties to the contract bound thereby If a man merely signs a contract and puts it in his pocket and does no allow it to depart from him as his act, it is not execution. Consequently where in a suit on a mortgage, the mortgagors defendants plead that they signed the contract but they never allowed it to depart from them or to come into the possession of any other person who could make use of it and hold them bound by it, the pleading must be construed as a denial of execution. [F. 58 B. 58 (61, 66)]

———S. 2 (1)—"Agriculturist"—Definition—Rules governing.

The word "ordinarily" which occurs in S. 2 (1) shows that it is only a bona fide agriculturist who comes within the definition. The word "ordinarily" means regularly and habitually and not casually. The word does not also mean 'solely.' The onus of proof is on the person who sets himself up as an agriculturist. It is difficult for the Court to lay down any rules for determining the exact nature and the quantity or extent of the work required to be done by an agriculturist. It may however be stated, first that it is not necessary for the agriculturist to engage personally in agricultural labour throughout the day; it is enough if he is engaged for a larger or smaller portion of the day. It must however be an appreciable amount of work which he engages in and not merely some casual or desultory work in the fields. Secondly, the agriculturist cannot be said to engage personally in agricultural labour if he gets the work done only through labourers but he can still be said to be engaged personally if he himself works side by side with the labourers employed by him. He need not cultivate the lands all by himself. Thirdly, even if the principal income of the agriculturist is from non-agricultural sources, he would still be an agriculturist if he does an appreciable amount of agricultural work for a portion of the day. The mere description as trader does not prevent a person from showing that he is an agriculturist. (Wadia, J.) RAMCHANDRA ATMARAM v. TUKARAM NANA. 58 Bom. 58=6 I.R. ———S. 2 (1)—"Agriculturist"—Status of—Acquisition—Conditions of.

It is impossible to say that a man who has been a trader can, merely by working in the fields for a couple of months, acquire the status of an agriculturist on the ground that he ordinarily engages personally in agricultural labour. It would be necessary to have evidence of a full agricultural season or at any rate a much longer period than two months, before it can be reasonably said that he comes within the definition of the term in S 2 (1) of the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act. ——S. 2 (1)—Duty of Court—Applicability of exemption—Determination.

It is generally left to the Commissioner of the High Court for taking accounts, to determine whether a person's income is derived principally from agricultural sources, and that is generally done by ascertaining whether his income from agricultural sources exceeds his income from non-agricultural sources for a period of three years before the date of the suit. But it is for the Court to determine whether the person who claims to be an agriculturist under the second branch of the definition is a person who ordinarily engages personally in agricultural labour, within the limits of the District to which the Act applies. ———S. 15 D—Suit under—Right to bring—Dispute as to title and quantum of interest—Suit not incompetent on that account.

What is wanted by S. 91, T. P. Similarly any person who is interested in the equity of redemption, provided he is an agriculturist within the meaning of the term as defined in the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act, though he may not be the original mortgagor or a person claiming through under him, can sue under S. 15 D. And existence of any dispute as to plaintiff's interest having been lost by adverse possession and also as to quantum of his interest does not prevent him from maintaining such a suit; for having regard to the object of the Act, it should be construed liberally and it would be unjust to throw out a suit on this ground. In a suit which was filed on 16th March, 1931, and decreed on 20th February, 1932, there was an issue as to whether the defendant was an agriculturist and the Court held that he was not. The Court on 21st April, 1932, ordered, in execution, sale of the attached property. Subsequently in reply to a notice under O. 21, R. 66, C. P. Code, the defendant objected to the sale on the ground that he was an agriculturist as under S. 22 of the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act, the property could not be attached or sold.

Held, that the finding as to status of the defendant not being an agriculturist spoke from the date of the decree, viz., 20th February, 1932, and not from the date of the suit, and that the defendant who was a trader on 20th February, 1932, cannot be deemed to have become an agriculturist by 21st April, 1932, the date of the order for sale. The date for determining the status in execution is the date of the order for sale under O. 21, R. 64, C. P. ———S. 22—"Order"—Meaning of—Order in execution for the purpose of enforcing award.

Per Rupchand, A.J.C.—The expression "execution" is sometimes used in a technical sense as referring to the carrying out of a previous order of the Court usually embodied in a decree. But one of the fundamental canons of construction of statutes is that as a general rule the Court should follow the ordinary and popular meaning of expressions used by the legislature. This would be the more so, when the popular meaning of the expression used in a statute conforms to the avowed intention of the legislature. Therefore, a narrow construction cannot be put upon S. 22, so as to limit its operation to attachment and sale of property in execution proceedings filed for enforcement of a decree or a previous order of the Court for payment of the money and thereby to exclude from its operation an attachment and sale made in pursuance of an order of the Court, though such order may have been passed for the purpose of enforcing an award made by the arbitrators under the Act which is enforceable as a decree.

Per Wild, J.C.—The word "execution" has a definite and a certained meaning when used with the word "decree" and refers to the carrying out of the order or decision embodied in the decree. No decree can be executed without a subsequent order of the Court which executes it and the word "order" in S. 22 means an order which can be executed as a decree can be executed and not order subsequent to the decree or executable order. DIVORCE ACT (IV OF 1869)—Ex parte proceeding —Duty of Court.

When in an application for divorce neither the respondent nor the co-respondent seek to resist the petition the duty of special circumspection is thrown upon the Court The Court has a discretion in certain specified events either to pronounce a decree for divorce or to dismiss the petition. The exercise of that discretion must be regular and systematic. For this purpose the Judge should make free use of his power to look into all the necessary circumstances even though his attention is not called to them by the party. The danger of collusion between the parties must always be borne in mind especially when there has been a long delay in applying to the Court for relief. To these may be added the further propositions that the presumption of law is against a change of domicile, which must be proved by the person alleging it, and that a wife's domicile is the domicile of her husband Where a European claims to be domiciled in India, it will be pertinent to enquire where his father lived and died, or resides, as the case may be. where he and his father were born, the circumstances in which he came to and resides in India, which will assist in ascertaining whether there exists an animus revertendi or an animus manendi, his object in residing in India, and generally as to the conditions under which he lives and his habits of life. Intention has nothing whatever to do with the question of residence. Whether or not a person resides in a particular district is a question of fact and depends in each case upon the evidence. Though an Indian Act should not ordinarily be construed in the light of statutes enacted by another legislature, yet S. 7 of the Divorce Act makes it abundantly clear that the legislative authority in enacting the Indian Divorce Act had in view the principles and rules upon which the Court in England then acted and gave relief. ———S. 7—Domicile — Change of—Presumption—Burden of proof.

Domicile is of two kinds: domicile of origin and domicile of choice. The domicile of origin is irrevocably ascertained at the party's nativity. A domicile of choice he can indeed acquire: but the domicile of origin remains in abeyance and is at any moment ready to revive. Every presumption is to be made in favour of the original domicile. It is for the party who relies on a change of domicile to prove a double intention: the intention of abandoning his domicile of origin and the intention of adopting the domicile of choice. A domicile of choice is not established by mere assertion. The petitioner left his native land under orders and not of his own free-will. He came to India in obedience to other authority, and not in the exercise of any choice of his own. Being thus transplanted he did not strike root. The petitioner, moreover, was neither a house-holder, nor any member of any club in India, nor was he permanently employed.

Held, that the petitioner was not domiciled in India. (Ferrers, J.C.) HALL v. HALL. I.R. 1933 Sind 132 = 143 I.C. 618 = A I.R. 1933 Sind 70.

It is almost impossible to administer the law on principles and rules as laid down by the Divorce Court in England if the parties do not conform to the rules of procedure both under the Civil Procedure Code which applies to cases under the Divorce Act and to the principles and rules upon which the Court in England acts. The rules must be complied with. A petition which does not comply with the rules and which does not contain all the particulars ought not to be admitted. In divorce case, the parties must first establish the fact of marriage. The Divorce Court in England does not act upon the evidence of the petitioner only to prove the factum of marriage, but it is necessary to produce a statutory certificate of marriage. But the practice, though universal, is not necessarily a rule of law, and if the circumstances warrant it, the Court may still hold the marriage proved even in the absence of a certificate. ———S. 7—Principles applicable—Nature of enquiry—Procedure.

Under S. 7, the provisions of which must be strictly complied with, Courts in India are required to give relief on principles and rules which are as nearly as may be conformable to the principles and rules on which the Court for Divorce and Matrimonial cases in England for the time being acts and gives relief. One of these principles is that a decree for dissolution of marriage cannot be made merely on admission and without recording evidence. Even if the Court is satisfied that the petitioner has established his case by evidence, it is necessary for it to go further and find whether there has been collusion ; and whether the petitioner has been in any manner accessory to or conniving at the adultery or has condoned the same. Having found on these questions, in favour of the petitioner, the Court is not bound to give a decree if it finds that the petitioner has been guilty of adultery or has been guilty of unreasonable delay in presenting the petition or of having wilfully separated himself from the other party before the adultery complained of. When a charge of adultery is proved, the first thing to which a Court directs its attention is the delay which has occurred since the husband became aware of the fact. ———S. 10—Adultery—Proof—Inference from circumstances.

It is a fundamental rule that it is not necessary to prove the direct fact of the adultery. In every case almost, the fact is inferred from circumstances that lead to it by fair inference as a necessary conclusion, and unless this were the case, and unless this were so held, no protection whatever could be given to marital rights. ———S. 10—Adultery—Proof—Inference from conduct.

It is no doubt extremely difficult, if not impossible, to prove the actual fact of adultery, but no sensible man familiar with the common course of human conduct would ever persuade himself that when a man turns away his wife and lives with another woman in the same room for days and months that their relations could be altogether innocent. Where therefore a woman shares a room with a stranger and her undue familiarity with him leads to the latter's wife being turned out of doors and the woman behaves indifferently towards her own husband, the circumstances throw a sinister right on her relations with the stranger, and any man of common sense would irresistibly come to the conclusion that she was living in adultery with him. ———S. 10—Dissolution of marriage—Grounds—Marriage with another woman with adultery.

Bigamy with adultery is specifically defined in the Act as meaning adultery with the same woman with whom the bigamy was committed, but marriage with another woman with adultery is not defined. The definition contained in S 3 (8) merely deals with marriage with another woman which is defined as meaning marriage of any person being married to any other person during the life of the former wife, whether the second marriage shall have taken place within the Dominions of His Majesty or elsewhere. Therefore, if a man after such second marriage cohabits with such woman, the first wife is entitled to apply for dissolution of marriage just as she would have been entitled to apply if the husband would have been guilty of 'bigamy' with adultery. S. 10 of the Divorce Act sets out the grounds on which marriage may be dissolved by the Court. If the legislature had intended that other grounds and other methods of obtaining divorce should be available to the parties, one would expect a proviso saving the operation of the personal law. It cannot be supposed that the legislature, in dealing with marriages according to the Christian conception, left it open for such marriages to be affected by the personal law of one of the parties. Although the provisions of the Indian Limitation Act do not apply to suits or proceedings under the Indian Divorce Act, one of the first things which the Court should look to when a charge of adultery is preferred is whether there has been such delay as to lead to the conclusion that the petitioner has either connived at the adultery or was wholly indifferent to it. ——S. 14—Discretion of Court—Principles governing—Petitioner guilty of adultery—Interference by Court of appeal with discretion of trial Court.

The Court (in India), for the purpose of determining whether it ought to exercise its discretion in favour of a petitioner who has been guilty of adultery, is bound to follow the general principles and rules laid down by the Court of appeal in Wickins v. Wickins, (1918) P. 265 and Holland v. Holland, (1918) P. 273. Though the Court should bear in mind the various matters which other Judges have thought well to take into consideration, it would be neither expedient nor legal for the Court to search among the various authorities for subsidiary tests by which the unfettered judicial discretion entrusted to it is to be limited and controlled. It is the duty of the Judge to exercise his own discretion in the matter and to decide as he deems fit, having regard to the circumstances of the case, whether he ought or ought not to grant the petitioner a divorce, notwithstanding that during the marriage the petitioner had committed adultery. Where the petitioner concealed from the Court the fact that she had committed adultery, in the proceedings for dissolution of marriage and during the intervention proceedings persistently, deliberately and foolishly denied that adultery ever took place and the trial Court had refused to grant dissolution to the petitioner.

Held, the Court of appeal would not interfere with the exercise of his discretion by the trial Judge. Holland v. Holland, (1918) P. 273, Foll. (Page, C.J. and Mya Bu, J.) SWAINE v. SWAINE. 10 Rang. 299=I.R 1932 Rang. 191=139 I.C 479=A.I.R. 1932 Rang. 172.

In petitions for dissolution of marriage there is nothing in the Divorce Act as regards the exercise of the discretion of the Court, and in this matter the practice in the English Courts must be followed. There is no doubt that the discretion of Court in these matters ought to be used with care. The main consideration is the interest of the community at large. There is one ground however on which the discretion of the Court in invariably exercised and that is where the wilful neglect or misconduct of the respondent husband caused or conduced to his wife's adultery. Further there must be complete candour and disclosure on the part of the petitioner who wishes the Court to exercise its discretion in his or her favour. In a petition for divorce by the wife on the ground of her husband's adultery and cruelty, when she makes out her case, but admits herself having been guilty of adultery, the respondent should not be allowed to avoid the consequences of proved misconduct by putting forward an act or acts of misconduct on the part of the petitioner for which, however, the respondent was himself in as serious degree responsible; and when it is found that it was the conduct of the husband (respondent) in forcing the wife to leave the home that has conduced to the adultery which she confesses, the respondent should not be allowed to take advantage of that.

Held, further, on the facts that a delay of three years was not, under the circumstances, unreasonable and should be condoned by the Court, and that discretion should be exercised in the wife's favour by granting the divorce, notwithstanding the delay and her admitted adultery. The jurisdiction of the High Court to confirm the decree in a divorce suit, under S. 17 of the Act, arises immediately upon a reference by the District Judge, and to complete the jurisdiction it is not necessary that there should be any personal appearance of the petitioner before the High Court or that there should be a petition at all for the purpose. The fact that a guilty party has also put in a petition for confirmation of the decree, is immaterial to the question of the exercise of the High Court's jurisdiction and will not destroy that jurisdiction. There is a different between Ss. 16 and 17 of the Act, the term "decree nisi" is not used in S. 17, whereas it is used in the case of S. 16. (Courtney

In order that the Court may have jurisdiction to grant a decree for dissolution of marriage, the parties must profess the Christian religion, and they must also be domiciled in India at the date of the presentation of the petition. The domicile of the wife is the same as that of the husband, and it is his domicile which has to be considered. The domicile of origin remains until it is changed and a domicile of choice is acquired, and the burden of proving a change of domicile is upon the person who asserts it. Where the domicile of origin of the husband is Indian, the only question is whether there is any evidence that domicile has been changed. But where the domicile of origin is not Indian, then it is necessary to ascertain whether there is any evidence that domicile had been charged in favour of an Under S. 17, the High Court has full power to confirm or not to confirm the decree nisi and an order not confirming it would amount to an order dismissing the suit. The petitioner sued in the District Court for dissolution of his marriage with his wife. He was granted a decree and he then applied to the High Court for confirmation of the decree. Later on, he applied to the effect that his wife had agreed to come back to him and that he was willing to take her back and he prayed that the case should be consigned to the record room. The order passed was that the parties had settled their differences and the application for confirmation was withdrawn. On a later date, the petitioner applied once again for confirmation of the decree nisi.

Any state of mind which falls short of lunacy or idiocy cannot be allowed to be a ground for annulment of a marriage. Persons differ from one another in the decree of intelligence possessed by them. It would be a dire calamity if it could be said as a matter of law that a marriage, entered into by a person who is neither a lunatic nor an idiot, is void, simply because one of the parties lacks in intelligence, although he is able to understand the nature of the bonds of matrimony into which he is entering. Where there is wilful refusal of sexual intercourse due to incapacity arising from nervousness or hysteria or from an invincible repugnance to the act of consummation and thus rendering the consummation impracticable a Court is justified in declaring such a marriage to be null and void on the ground of impotence. In a case of an application by J for nullity of his marriage with K on the ground of her impotence, K in her written statement admitted that the parties were married but that the marriage could not be consummated owing to an uncontrollable repugnance on her part to sexual intercourse with J. The only evidence in the case was the sworn testimony of J but there was the further fact of K's failure to attend in person and her refusal to submit to medical examination though ordered.

Held, that corroboration was not necessary and that J was entitled to a decree absolute for the nullity of the marriage with K. 9 Lah. 116 and 16 Bom. 639, Relon. ——S. 19—"Idiot"—Meaning.

The "idiot" in S. 19 must be read as a word used in its ordinary significance and means a person deficient in mental or intellectual faculty as to be incapable of ordinary acts of reasoning or rational conduct. The petitioner who has a licence to hold a gun for shooting, who goes about shooting, who rides a horse, who sometimes goes about fishing, who can compose a letter for himself and write it in a tolerably good hand, who reads books to pass time, who is invited to tea parties, who knows the nature of the transaction of marriage in which he entered with the opposite party and indeed who arranged for if with the Bishop cannot be called an idiot in the ordinary acceptance of the word.

Per Sulaiman, C J.—In order to find that a person is an idiot, it is not sufficient to find that he is a mere imbecile. The Judge has to satisfy himself regarding the idiocy of a person. Doctor's opinion in such matters is not conclusive. It is at the most a guide. The mere fact that the person is feeble-minded and that he has the intelligence of a child of about eight or nine years of age is not sufficient to declare that person an idiot within the meaning of S. 19 (3) which classes lunatics and idiots together. DIVORCE ACT (1869), S. 22.

Misrepresentation inducing consent to marry cannot upset a marriage. The position in law is that the party imposed upon must be deceived to such an extent that there is in reality no consent at all to the marriage. Such consent cannot be given by a child of nine years of age and consequently a person who, though 54 years old, is found by the Court to be very feeble-minded and to have the mentality of a child of nine years of age is incapable of giving his consent. (Young, J.) ALFRED ROBERT JONES v. MT. TITLI. 55 All. 185 = 6 I.R. (All.) 11 = 144 I.C. 906 = A.I.R. 1933 All. 122.

——S. 19 (3) and (4)—Comparison with cases under Ss. 4 and 5 of Christian Marriage Act (XV of 1872).

The various grounds on which the Court can give a decree of nullity under the Divorce Act refer to cases where there has been a marriage validly performed Questions arise under Ss. 4 and 5, Christian Marriage Act, when the marriage has not been validly performed. There is a clear distinction between a decree of nullity of a valid marriage and a declaration that the marriage itself is illegal and void. There can therefore be no doubt that there is jurisdiction in the High Court to hear and decide questions under the Christian Marriage Act. 47 I C. 544, Rel. on; 13 Beng L.R. 109 and 12 Cal. 706 (F.B.), Ref. The object of the damages is in no sense punitive. The means of the co respondent have nothing to do with the question. The only questions that a Court can take into consideration are what loss the petitioner has sustained and whether or not such loss has been cast on the petitioner by the action of the co-respondent. In determining these questions, the Court must take into consideration the conduct of the husband and how far he may by his own conduct have contributed to his wife's wrong-doing. It cannot be contended that in cases of judicial separation, the custody of daughters as a rule should be given to the mother in preference to the father. Where the father is held entitled to a decree of judicial separation and he has not been found guilty of any conduct which could disentitle him from the custody of his children and he holds a respectable position in life and is in a better position to give them a decent education and to provide and look to their upbringing and the mother's past conduct shows that if the children are left with her, she is sure to alienate their affections from the father, the Court would exercise a wise discretion in allowing the father who is in law natural guardian of his minor children to have their custody. It is no doubt true that prima facie the innocent party is entitled to the custody of the children of the marriage. But there is no hard and fast rule on the subject. The matrimonial offence which justified the divorce is not always sufficient to disentitle the mother to the custody of her daughter. The paramount consideration is the interests of the children.

Where the child of tender years has been living with her mother all along, the mother was extremely devoted to her, it would be a great shock for the child to be separated from the mother, the father was practically a stranger to the child, and the child could be better maintained by the mother than by the father.

The defendant was not a tenant of the plaintiff, nor was there any relationship between the parties. The defendant also disclaimed to be a licensee. His case was that there was a custom by which he claimed exclusive right in the timber; and he further denied having cut any timber during the plaint period. The lower Court, while disbelieving the case set up by the plaintiff, found that the defendant had been in adverse possession for over twenty years, dismissed the suit as barred by limitation, relying on an entry in the record of rights, describing the tenant as being in possession, twenty years ago or more.

Held, in second appeal, (1) that the failure of the plaintiff to establish the contract set up by him was not fatal, as the case set up was not inconsistent with his right to the trees as the owner of the land; (2) that there could not be any custom strictly so called to appropriate the trees unless the defendant were a tenant; and if there had been established anything in the nature of a custom, the right thereunder would amount to what in England was known as a profit a prendre and therefore an "easement" under S. 2 of the Limitation Act; and (3) that the onus of establishing the existence of an easement, and therefore a right to the trees, was on the defendant and that not having been discharged, plaintiff's claim should be allowed. ———Proof—Circumstantial evidence—Long continued user—Presumption of lawful origin—Right in irrigation channel.

A right of easement may well depend not on the terms of the grant but upon the circumstances under which it was made: The appellants claimed the right to take water necessary for the cultivation of a second crop on their lands from an irrigation channel belonging to the respondent and for that purpose to construct whenever necessary a chappakattu or temporary groyne. It was admitted that the second crops had been regularly grown for a long time, it was also shown that the channel in question was the only source of supply during the second crop season, and that this supply could have been utilised only by the erection of a chappakattu.

Held, that long continued user should be ascribed to a lawful origin, having regard to the probabilities and circumstances of the case The evidence of user was sufficient to raise the necessary presumption of an arrangement in favour of the appellants. ———S. 2 (b)—Right of fishery in gross—Custom to support—Validity of.

A claim to profits a prendre over the soil of another such as a right to fish without stint and for commercial purposes, which might lead to the destruction of the subject matter is a claim of right unknown to law and a custom, which may be alleged to support it, is bad and unreasonable. Though this principle is not, perhaps, applicable to the case of a right in gross (fishery) vested in the inhabitants of a particular village, the fact that the fish is to be taken for commercial purposes and the fact that under the custom alleged, any of the persons has the right to bring in as many others as he chooses on payment of a nominal fee are factors which stamp the custom with considerable uncertainty as regards the persons entitled to exercise the right and unreasonableness that stand in the way of its being pleaded as having created a right. Further, though the payment of a reasonable fee is not real objection to the validity of a custom if one such existed, the fact that the fee was paid per head of persons fishing was antagonistic to the idea of a customary right which must be a right enjoyable without leave and licence. EASEMENT.

———Ss. 2 (b) and 60—Use of building as a mosque with consent of Zamindar—If a mere licence—Presumption of dedication from long user—Right to convert a katcha into a pucca building.

Per Bennet, J.—The provisions of the Easements Act or of any part of Chap. VI in regard to licence do not apply where a Zamindar allows the Muhammadan population to use a building as a mosque. It is one of those cases which is excepted by S. 2. A finding that a mosque exists necessarily implies that there is no longer any question of easement or of licence. Under the Mahomedan Law the mosque is the property of God and not the property of the Zamindar. There is no need for a transfer such as is necessary for transfer of property and the consent of a Zamindar to the use of a building as a mosque is sufficient.

Per Sulaiman, C.J.—A right of worship may be acquired as a customary right which can be availed of by a large body of persons by virtue of such custom. It may also be claimed as a part of public right, which, of course, would be a right vested in an entire community. Under S. 2 of the Easements Act, these two classes of rights would be saved from the provisions of that Act. Where the Courts finds that a mosque or a temple has stood for a long time and worship has been performed in it by the public, it is open to the Court to infer that the building does not stand there merely by the leave or licence of the owner of the site, but that the land itself is a dedicated property and the site is a consecrated land, and is no longer the private property of the original owner. There is nothing legally objectionable in non-Muslim owners making a grant of a land to Muslims and in that way to enable them to build a mosque on such land. If the finding merely were that there is a right to perform worship on a piece of ground, there would, of course, be no right to to put up a pucca building on that land for such a purpose. But if the finding is that there is already a mosque or a temple on the land, though the structure is katcha the necessary inference would be that the site has become a consecrated and dedicated property ; and then there can be no objection to the building being converted into a pucca building. It is no longer the case of a mere licence which cannot be exceeded beyond the terms on which it was granted. But that other owner cannot go on his neighbour's land, dig there and take the underground water found there and justify his action because the water was running in undefined channels, as that would be trespass and be an actionable wrong. Plaintiffs as lower riparian proprietors sued the upper riparian proprietors complaining that the putting up of a dam by the defendants higher up interfered with the flow of water in the stream and claimed a declaration that the defendants had no right to use the water for irrigation, a direction for the demolition of the dam put by the defendants and for a permanent injunction prohibiting the defendants from ever putting up a dam across the river. The defendants in their written statement claimed that what they did was in the exercise of their riparian rights as upper owners and did not plead any special rights founded on contract, custom or prescription The lower appellate Court framed the injunction in the form, that the defendants are prohibited from putting up such a dam as will cause diminution to the flow of water to which plaintiffs would be entitled.

Held, that in the light of the rights declared by Ills. No easement of necessity can be granted unless the easement is necessary for the enjoyment of the property. Sweepers passing through residential houses would give rise to such a state of inconvenience as to make the houses for all practical purposes uninhabitable for people of ordinary decency and cleanly habits. Where plaintiff's houses were solely dwelling houses and the locality was one in which respectable people dwelt and the part over which the right of sweepers to carry buckets after cleaning plaintiff's latrine was claimed, was already being used by the sweepers who carried buckets from the defendant's latrine.

Held, that to compel the plaintiff to have his night-soil buckets carried out through the houses would destroy as residential dwellings the houses which were the properties sold by the original owner of the whole plot of land as dwelling-houses and as such it was an easement of necessity.

EASEMENTS ACT (1882), S. 13.

Held further, that the hardship inflicted on the owner of the servient tenement was not very great, because the sweepers who served the plaintiff's latrines would only pass along the path already used to a great extent by the sweepers who cleaned defendant's latrine, and they would walk along the path with two buckets instead of only one. Where the owner of three contiguous houses having a path running at the back used for the carriage of nightsoil buckets from the houses to the public road, sells one or more of them to others, it is obvious that there is a common intention on the part of the vendor and purchaser or purchasers that thereafter the night soilbuckets should be taken to the public road along the path at the back in the manner in which they were being taken before, and an implied easement to that effect results from and is ancillary to the conveyance of the houses. The suit tank was built about 1813 and it was inundating the lands in question till the breach in 1878. The plaintiff purchased a portion of the tank bed in 1899 from the Court of Wards which was managing one of the two estates, which as between them owned the entire tank. After the estate was handed over by the Courts of Wards to the Zemindar, he repaired the tank about 1910 as a result of which the tank bed belonging to the plaintiff was flooded. The plaintiff sought to restrain the owners of the two estates from making the repairs and to demolish the bund erected by the defendant.

Held, treating the right to inundate lands by storing water in irrigation tanks as an easement, the easement continued in favour of the defendant even though at the partition between the defendants predecessor and the vendor of the plaintiff, there was not reservation of the easement and the plaintiff had therefore no right to sue for damages or restrain the repairing of the bund unless there was any negligence in the repairs. Under the Indian Law no express reservation is necessary for the easement to continue in favour of the grantor. To support a claim to a prescriptive right of way over a pathway, the pathway must be enjoyed peaceably and openly as an easement without interruption for more than 20 years. Where the defendant obstructs the ancient light of the plaintiff by erecting a building and plaintiff sues for injunction to have the building demolished or for damages, the question whether an injunction shall issue or whether the plaintiff must be content with an award of damages must depend on the circumstances of each particular case. If it is clear that damages will afford adequate relief to the injured party and the defendant has not been guilty of any high handed action, or unneighbourly conduct, an award in damages is the appropriate remedy. If the property is still substantially useful to him, depreciation in value can be met by a decree for damages; but where the defendant's building deprives plaintiff to a very great extent of his best source of light and incidentally to a large extent of the beneficial use of his property, damages would not be adequate relief. No doubt as a rule, a plaintiff should not be allowed to put forward contradictory pleas, but the pleas of ownership and easement, though inconsistent, are not contradictory and can be put forward in the alternative. The important point to be considered in such a matter is the question quo animo egerit with reference to the user alleged by the plaintiff; in other words, if the plaintiff had used a way on an assertion of title of owner, he could not put forward such user in support of a right of easement. That view however does not prevent the putting forward of alternative pleas in a suit, though at the trial of the suit the character of the user and the question of quo animo egerit would have to be decided, and, if the user is proved, one plea would have to be affirmed and the other rejected. 34 Cal. 51 (F.B.), A.I.R. 1924 Cal. 369 and A I.R 1925 Cal 788, Rel. on ; 49 Mad 820 (F B), Ref (*Staples, A J. A suit for perpetual injunction restraining the defendant from removing the necessary lateral support, to which the plaintiff's land is entitled, is a suit in the nature of a quia timet action and the plaintiff, in order to succeed, must prove imminent danger of a substantial kind, or that the apprehended injury, if it does occur, will be irreparable. Therefore excavation and removal of the earth on his own land by a defendant, without leaving sufficient support to the adjoining plaintiff's land to enable it to remain in its natural state, does not per se constitute an actionable invasion of the latter's right; and such an act to constitute a valid foundation for a claim by the adjoining plaintiff for damages must be coupled with actual damage or injury to his property. The plaintiff as the owner of a certain survey number in a village sued to restrain defendants 1 and 2, who claimed to be trustees of a temple, from interfering with the plaintiff's use of a pathway across suit survey number and the Government also was impleaded as a party. The lower appellate Court found that the suit survery number belonged to the Government, who had allowed its use in favour of the temple. On the contention that though for want of 60 years, user the plaintiff had not acquired an easement as against the Government, he had by reason of 20 years user acquired a limited right which was sufficient to prevail as against any interest which private persons like defendants 1 and 2 might possess in that property.

Held, assuming the possibility of acquisition of an easement against the holder of a limited interest, the acquisition was possible only to the extent to which a grant might be possible within the terms of S 8 of the Easements Act and as no such grant by the temple would be possible having regard to the nature of its interest in the property, the plaintiff would not by 20 years, user acquire prescriptive right as against property which belonged to Government even to the extent of preventing defendants 1 and 2 from interfering with his user of the way.

An owner of a large piece of land divided it into several plots for building purposes and sold them to different persons, reserving one part for himself and in each sale-deed, there was a covenant by which every purchaser bound himself to keep open a passage 15 feet wide for the common use of the other plot-holders. The defendants erected posts in the passage and reduced its width to 7 ft. In a suit by one of the other plot-holders, the lower Court applied S. 22 of the Act, considered 10 ft. width sufficient and granted a decree accordingly.

Held, an easement of way over another's land by virtue of an agreement is governed by S. 20 and not S. 22; the rights in this case were governed by the contract between the vendor and the purchaser, which should be given full effect to. The owner of the dominant tenement is entitled to the uninterrupted access through his ancient windows of a quantity of light, the measure of which is what is required for the ordinary purposes of inhabitancy or business of the tenement, according to the ordinary notions of mankind. Where in a suit for a perpetual injunction, the lower appellate Court recorded a finding that if the ventilators opening into the verandah on the plaintiff's premises were to be closed by the action of the defendant in erecting a new building, the rooms of the plaintiff would become altogether dark and the light left would not be sufficient for ordinary purposes but that there was no actionable nuisance as there were other sources of light and air on the plaintiff's own premises which would keep the rooms in a habitable condition.

Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to the light and air through the ventilators in dispute because they were as much his property as his own premises and that he should not be made to give up his rights for the convenience of the defendant and that, therefore, the lower appellate Court was in error in not granting the injunction asked for. Where in a suit for a mandatory injunction against the defendant prohibiting him from obstructing the light and air passing through certain ventilators, it was found that even if those ventilators were closed, the courtyard of the plaintiff's house would receive plenty of light and air, there is no question of any nuisance being caused by the obstruction and the plaintiff is not entitled to any injunction. Even though the Easements Act does not expressly apply to cases of licenses before the coming into force of the Act, the principles underlying Ch. 6 of the Act, being in consonance with justice equity and good conscience, may well be applied. Hence when an owner of land gives permission to another person to put up a building of a permanent character and he incurs expenses in the execution of such work, the licensor is by necessary implication estopped from revoking his permission so as to prejudice the licensee, whose position has been compromised in consequence. It would be inequitable, unjust and unfair to allow a licensor to order that the licensee should forthwith remove the work of a permanent character, which he has put up after incurring expenditure. In such an event, the transaction ceases to be a mere license revocable at will, but may in certain circumstances amount to a license coupled with a transfer of interest or, at any rate, a case where the licensee acting upon the license has executed a work of a permanent character and has incurred expenses in the execution so as to make the license irrevocable; so long as the construction subsists, the right to revoke it would be in abeyance. Plaintiff was the owner of a plot of land which the father of defendant No. 2 had taken on lease from the father of the plaintiff. The kabuliyat provided that no other person would be allowed to reside in the house standing thereon without the permission of the zemindar. The lessee having died, his daughter and son, the 2nd defendant succeeded; the former sold her share of the materials of the house to the plaintiff; while the latter sold his share of the same to defendant No. 1. In a suit by the plaintiff for partition of the share of the materials in the house purchased by him and for possession of the site after removal of the share of the materials purchased by defendant No. 1 from defendant No. 2.

Held, (1) that S. 60 of the Easements Act did not bar the suit, as no question of any licence arose, that defendant No. 2 had not transferred any right of residence to defendant No. 1, who had therefore no right to occupy the site, (2) that the sale-deed by defendant No. 2 to defendant No. 1, was only in respect of the materials in the house and not of any right or interest in the land which belonged to the zemindar. S. 54, T. P. Act, expressly enacts that a contract for the sale of immovable property does not of itself create any interest in or charge on such property. There is therefore no room for the application of the English equitable doctrine that a contract for sale of real property makes the purchaser the owner in equity of the estate. Thus under the law applicable before the insertion of S. 53-A, an averment of the existence of a contract of sale, whether with or without an averment of possession following upon the contract, was not relevant defence to an action of ejectment. If the contract is still enforceable the defendant may found upon it to have the action stayed, and by suing for specific performance obtain a title which will protect him from ejectment. But if it is no longer enforceable, its part-performance will not avail him to any effect (Lord Macmillan.) PIR BUX v. MAHOMED TAHAR. 61 I.A. 388 = 58 Bom. 650 = 39 C.W.N. 34 = 1934 M. ———Suit for—Confusion of boundaries by defendant—Right to decree.

So long as the plaintiff is unable to identify the property from which he desires to eject the defendant, he is not entitled to a decree for partition and the Courts have no jurisdiction to grant the plaintiff's prayer in such a case unless some equity is superinduced by the act of the parties or unless the defendant is shown to be a joint tenant or a tenant in common or a coparcener or an agent, trustee or one occupying a fiduciary position towards the plaintiff in respect to the land. This principle has, however, to be applied with reference to the special features of each case ; manifest injustice will be the result if this principle is confined strictly to these cases. Where in a case of confusion of boundaries, it was shown that the defendant obtained possession from the plaintiff's father and that the confusion was caused by the defendant's wrongful act, it was held the inability of the plaintiff to identify the property was no bar to his right to a decree. The contention that if the consumer elects to take a supply of energy from the licensee's distributing main at any point outside his premises, and receives the supply through the licensee's meter, and thereafter it is conveyed through a line which has been constructed by the consumer and at his cost, the obligation to keep in a safe condition the line and works from the point of commencement of supply (i.e., the meter) to the consumer's premises and also the line and works on the consumer's premises, is cast upon the consumer and not on the licensee cannot be accepted, for it runs counter to the object and effect of the Electricity Act. The licensee is not entitled by agreement with the consumer to release himself from the obligation to see that the lines, apparatus and works by which electricity is transmitted, so long as he retains control of them, are maintained in a safe condition, because this obligation is cast upon him not merely for the benefit of the consumer and the licensee, but also for the protection and in the interest of the public generally. Where therefore the licensee allows the stay wire in the road to be in an unsafe condition, the licensee fails to perform an obligation imposed upon him under the Act and is guilty of a breach of R. 37 and can be convicted under R. 107. But a conviction in the alternative under R. 107 and S. 47 however is not in accordance with law, for, the case falls neither under S. 236 nor S. 367 (3), Cr. P. Code. (*Page, C. In February, 1932, the accused was served with an order by which he was directed within eighteen hours of his leaving jail custody to report himself to the Police Sub-Inspector at Karmala and thereafter should not leave the limits of Karmala and that he should not without the permission of the District Magistrate enter the area comprised in Sholapur Taluka excepting Railway limits. Subsequently the accused wrote to the Jail Superintendent stating that he desired to go to Bombay and requesting him to ask the District Magistrate to modify the conditions in the order so as to enable him to go to Bombay. That request was refused but the Government did in fact allow the accused to go to Bombay on his release from jail. The accused then wrote a letter stating that he did not propose to obey the order directing him to go to Karmala and that he intended to present himself before the City Magistrate of Sholapur in breach of the order. The District Magistrate asked the accused to see him immediately and offer an explanation. The letter was handed over to the accused at the Sholapur Railway Station and the accused thereupon went to the District Magistrate's bungalow. At the interview he refused to go back to Karmala and was arrested.

EMERGENCY POWERS ORDINANCE (1932), S. 28.

An order was served upon the petitioner by the District Magistrate under S. 4, sub-S. (1) prohibiting her from joining or taking part in any meeting of six or more persons in any public place within certain limits and in spite of the service of the notice on her, she made a speech to the persons numbering more than 100 asking the cloth merchants to close their shops and to boycott the British goods, and appealing to those present to enrol as recruits for the Congress

Held, that as it had not been shown that the boycott of British goods was the monopoly of the All-India Congress Committee no offence under S. 17 (1), Criminal Law Amendment Act, had been committed

Held however, that it was immaterial whether more than the prescribed number of persons assembled as a result of the invitation direct or indirect of the accused or whether she found a number of persons assembled and began to make a speech to them or whether persons collected on hearing her making a speech, in either case she must be held guilty of the offence of having taken part in a meeting in contravention of the terms of the notice served upon her. ——S. 28—Conviction under—Act prejudicial to public safety—Express finding not necessary.

The section does not require an express finding that the conviction was for an act prejudicial to the public safety or peace but it does require that the offence should be such an act. Under S. 47 unless an offence has been committed in furtherance of a movement prejudicial to the public safety or peace, no Court shall try the same, and the question whether the offence was or not of such a nature cannot be raised in any Court other than the Court trying the same. So the mere fact that the Court convicted the accused (under Ordinance V of 1932) shows that the Court was of opinion that it was such an offence. Where, moreover, the accused pleaded guilty in the trial Court, it involves an admission that the offence was one committed in furtherance of a movement prejudicial to the public safety. The fact that the Magistrate did not record in express terms a finding to that effect does not vitiate a sentence of fine passed by him. (*Jack and M. C. all provisions of the Lettres Patent subject to the powers of the G. G. incases of emergency under Ss. 71 and 72 of the Government of India Act. That power, again, is excluded by S. 51 of the Ordinance. (iii) S. 107 of the Government of India Act. That is an Act of the Imperial Parliament and cannot be controlled by the G. G. Under this section the High Court has powers of superintendence over all Courts for the time being subject to its appellate jurisdiction. The Special Courts established under the Ordinance are such Courts, because under S. 39 of the Ordinance, the High Court has power to hear appeals in certain cases. ———Equitable estoppel—Basis and scope of the doctrine.

Where A has built on land which he thought was his, but it was really that of B, who knowing of A's mistake encouraged him to build either directly or by abstaining from asserting his legal right, equity will intervene for the protection of A. This, sometimes, is alluded to as the doctrine of equitable estoppel. But the foundation upon which reposes the right of equity to intervene is either contract or the existence of some fact which the legal owner is estopped from denying. In the case put B's conduct is such that from it may be inferred of a contract on his part not to disturb A in the possession of the land, or it may amount to a statement by B that the land is A's. 26 I.A. 58, Ref. Where, however, there was no mistaken belief by the appellant as to the ownership of the land which, he knew, belonged to the Crown, still less was any such mistaken belief known to the Crown, and in fact the occupation by the appellant was a trespass which, by dint of toleration for some time, became an occupation by leave and licence, there is no basis for any equitable doctrine of estoppel and the Crown is entitled to revoke the licence and direct the removal of the superstructures erected by the appellant. Even if the statement in Chadwick v. Manning, (1896) A.C. 238, that "silence is innocent and safe when there is no duty to speak" is not absolulely and for all purposes true, it is, at any rate, very necessary to take care, that persons are not landed in liability merely because they have not given information to some one over whose interests they have no duty to take care. There is no room for the application of the doctrine of estoppel by standing by, in the absence of some definite and particular conduct on the part of a person other than the mere fact that he had been impleaded as party. Where in a rent sale under B.T. Act a co-sharer landlord has been impleaded and has taken no part in the proceedings, there is no room for the doctrine of equitable estoppel by standing by. Where both parties to a deed know that it was executed for an immoral purpose or in contravention of statute or of public policy, neither of them will be estopped from proving those facts which render the deed void ab initio. In a suit on a mortgage by the mortgagee, the mortgagor-defendant pleaded that the mortgage sued on was a sham transaction not supported by consideration and a device to defeat a possible attachment of the properties by a creditor. ———Admissibility—Counter-affidavit by accused—Whether can be relied upon—Stamped with non judicial stamp.

An application was put in for the transfer of a case, on the ground that the accused person had been seen coming out from the compound of the trying Magistrate. This fact was sworn by an affidavit. The accused person denied this statement by a counter-affidavit sworn by him and so also the trying Magistrate by his own statement relying also upon the counter-affidavit. A complaint under S. 193, was ordered to be drawn up against the complainant and objections were taken to this procedure.

Held, it is not certain whether such a counter-affidavit would be inadmissible, for the purpose of deciding whether a complaint ought to be made. It is doubtful whether such the trying Magistrate is entitled to take such a statement into consideration, when coming to a conclusion whether a complaint should be made or not. It is unwise to act upon it when the difficulty can be overcome by directing an enquiry such as is mentioned in S. 476, Cr.P. Code. The affidavit was rejected as being inadmissible in evidence, as it was stamped with non-judicial stamps, whereas the rules require Court-fee stamps. (*Lort Williams and S. K. Where the evidence produced by one party is in direct conflict with the evidence produced by the other, the following tests may be applied for judging the veracity for the evidence. (1) The evidence which is consistent with a finding which is already established; (2) the comparative nearness in relationship of the witness; (3) the impartiality of the witnesses; (4) the inherent probability of their statements; (5) the impression created in the minds of the Judges by the demeanour of the witnesses in the box. According to well-established rules, great regard is to be paid to the findings of a Judge who has decided matters of fact deposed to by witnesses at the trial before him. But generally speaking it is undesirable to interfere with the findings of fact of the trial Judge who sees and hears the witnesses and has had an opportunity of noting their demeanour especially in cases where the issue is simple and depends on the credibility which attaches to one or other of conflicting witnesses. Evidence of the sources of common knowledge, if not of its extent, may perhaps be obtained by reference to a cyclopaedia and the lists of text books to be found but detailed information supplied from such sources requires usually to be established by experts. Circumstantial evidence.

———Circumstantial evidence—Criminal case.

In the definition of proof in the Evidence Act, no distinction is drawn between circumstantial and other evidence. In every case the Court should consider the whole matter before it and proceed with prudence before acting upon probabilities.

Held, on the facts, that the evidence disclosed grave suspicion of guilt, but that it did not raise that high degree of probability on which with due prudence a conviction for murder should be based. ———Circumstantial evidence—Criminal case—Mode of appreciation.

The principles to be followed in criminal cases based on circumstantial evidence are as follows: (1) The circumstances from which an inference adverse to the accused is sought to be drawn must be proved beyond all reasonable doubt and must be closely connected with the fact sought to be inferred therefrom; (2) in order to justify an inference of guilt the circumstances from which such an inference is sought to be drawn must be incompatible with the innocence of the accused and incapable of explanation upon any other reasonable hypothesis than that of guilt (Suhrawardy and Patterson, JJ.) JAHURA BIBI v. EMPEROR. 129 I.C. 677=32 Cr.L J. 418=52 C L J. 417=35 C.W.N. 169=1931 Cr.C. 43=A I.R. 1931 Cal. 11.

Confession.

———Confessions made to a Magistrate—Different classes—Evidentiary value.

Confessions made to a Magistrate can be divided into five classes:—(1) Those recorded with all the formalities prescribed by Ss. 164 and 365 Cr. P. Code. (2) Those imperfectly recorded, but where the defect is cured by S. 533, Cr. P. Code. (3) Where the defect is not cured and the confession is proved by the testimony of the Magistrate. (4) Where the Magistrate refuses to record the confession of an accused person produced before him for that purpose, but hears it. (5) Where the accused appears before a Magistrate of his own accord and makes an oral confession. Confessions falling under (1) and (2) are recorded under great precautions and should, therefore, carry more weight than those falling under the remaining classes. A confession under class (2) would be less weighty, because some of the precautions prescribed by law were not observed. A confession under class (4) should have very little weight unless the Magistrate can explain to the entire satisfaction of the Court why he refused to act under Ss. 164 and 364, Cr. P. Code. The weight to be attached to a confession under class, (5) would depend entirely on the circumstances under which it is made. (*Young, C. The de bene esse examination of the witnesses should ordinarily be held in Court and preferably before the Judge who is ultimately to hear and decide the suit. The Chamber Judge, however, has a discretion to delegate the work to the Prothonotary or one of his associates. The practice which has grown up in Bombay of the Prothonotary deputing one of his associates to do this work outside Court hours and charging a special fee from the parties therefor is binding on all parties, since it has been in existence for a long time and where they have acted on the faith of such practice, they cannot be allowed to question the legality of the fee so charged. Where the admission in pleadings renders it unnecessary to produce evidence at all, objection cannot be taken to the admissibility of the superfluous evidence when and if produced. But where the evidence is all inadmissible from the start, a mere admission of execution of a document even supported by the admission of the existence of an agreement embodied in the inadmissible document, both admissions being answers to questions which should have been disallowed, does not debar a party from objecting to the document on the ground of want of registration or any evidence as to its contents. There are two stages relating to documents. One is the stage when all the documents on which the parties rely are filed by them in Court. The next stage is when the documents are proved and formally tendered in evidence, it is at this later stage that the Court has to decide whether they should be admitted or rejected. If they are admitted and proved, then the seal of the Court is put on them giving certain details laid down by law, otherwise the documents are returned to the party who produced them with an endorsement thereon to that effect. Spies.

———Spies—Evidence of—Need for careful scrutiny.

The evidence of a person who associates himself with the accused without any criminal intention, with the sole object of entrapping the accused in order to detect an offence and thus acting as spy is legally admissible in evidence without corroboration. But some decree of disfavour attaches to the evidence of persons playing the role of a spy or informer. The line of discrimination between an accomplice and a spy is often a thin one. ———Witness—Child of tender years—Duty of Judge—Admissibility of evidence.

It is not likely for a boy of about seven years to distinguish between things heard by him and those which he has seen; and when there is a clear indication of inconsistent statements in his evidence, not much importance can be attached to it. It is not illegal to examine a witness of tender years, but it is important that the Judge should, as a precaution, ascertain in the first instance by means of a few simple questions, whether the intelligence of the child is such that it is capable of giving credible evidence; it is also desirable that the record of evidence should show that such a test has been in fact made. When it does not appear that any such attempt was made to test the capacity of the child witness to give his testimony, it is not safe to rely on the evidence of such a witness. EVIDENCE—Witness.

———Witness—Examination of party—Defendant as plaintiff's witness—Duty of Court.

If a party appears as a witness on behalf of the opposing party, the Court should before proceeding to record his statement question him or his Counsel as to whether he does not propose to appear as his own witness. If that party then declares that he does not propose to appear as his own witness, the Court should point out to the party producing him and that ordinarily speaking the matter should be left as it is and the Court be left to draw any adverse inference which may justifiably be drawn from the refusal of the party to appear in the witness-box and subject himself to cross examination. If the party, however, insist on examining the opposite party as his own witness, the Court should be careful not to allow him to cross-examine his own witness, because unless the evidence is declared hostile, the party producing the witness has no right to cross examine his own witness (Dalip Singh, J.) PURAN SINGH RELU SINGH v. MATHRA DAS. 6 R L. 628=148 I C. 1040 —35 P.L.R. 28=A.I R. 1934 Lah. 126.

———Witness—Right of to object to examination—Considerations—Witness a legal practitioner—If a ground for exemption.

It is not open to a witness to resist the order of the Court to examine him on the ground that his interests are likely to suffer by such examination. The interests of justice and truth are the deciding factors, and if the Court holds that the examination of a certain witness is necessary for the decision of a case pending before it, it is not for the witnesses to object to it or resist the order. The fact that the witness happens to be a legal practitioner will not justify him in resisting the order of the Court, although he may urge that the examination will prejudice his interests. The question is not to be judged from the point of view of his individual interests. The examination of a witness depends not on his consent but on the decision of the Court. "Anything said" would include the statements made, speeches delivered, or declarations made. Anything "done" must be some act done and not merely the intention or knowledge of the person. Anything written would include a manuscript, signed or unsigned, written by the person, and matter transcribed by him on a type writer. But a document, of which the writer is not known, found in the possession of a conspirator, would not by itself be admissible for the purpose of proving the truth of its contents as against the other accused. ——S. 13—Transaction — Question as to property being secular or debuttar*—Mortgagor by predecessor of party dealing with property as secular—Relevancy—Evidentiary value.*

The father of the plaintiff who was suing as a shebait in respect of certain property which he alleged was debuttar had in 1904 executed a mortgage deed in favour of the defendant, which contained an assertion to the effect that the property in dispute was secular property and had been partitioned as far back as 1839.

Held, the document was evidence under S. 13 of the Evidence Act as against the plaintiff who was claiming in the character of a shebait, as evidence of a transaction by plaintiff's father dealing with the property as secular, partible property, although the evidentiary value may be very slight. ——S. 13 (a)—Deed of partition—Mokurari right in tenancy—Whether can be proved.

S. 13 (a) only refers to the admissibility of any transaction by which a right is asserted. A deed of partition would be admissible in order to establish the right to effect the partition, because by that deed the right to partition the property was asserted. It would be a far-fetched application of the section to say that if in a deed of partition between two persons, rights are alleged with reference to the property which either has or has not any reference to the right to partition, these allegations should be considered as a transaction by which the right is asserted. Where a deed of partition contains a recital that the lands in schedule were held by the descendants in Mokarrari Kayemi interest, such a deed is not admissible in evidence for the purpose of establishing a Mokarrari right in the tenancy. ——Ss. 14 and 15—Similar transactions—Admissibility.

"It is undoubtedly not competent for the prosecution to adduce evidence tending to show that the accused has been guilty of criminal acts other than those covered by the indictment, for the purpose of leading to the conclusion that the accused is a person likely from his criminal conduct or character to have committed the offence for which he is being tried. On the other hand, the mere fact that the evidence adduced tends to show the commission of other crimes does not render it inadmissible, if it be relevant to an issue before the jury and it may be so relevant if it bears upon the question whether the acts alleged to constitute the crime charged in the indictment were designed or accidental, or to rebut a defence which would otherwise be open to the accused."

Per Lord Chancellor in (1894) A.C. 57. So evidence of similar transactions may be admissible as evidence of intention or knowledge but not evidence that the accused committed the offence with which he is charged. That is, where the intention of the accused in a relevant fact, evidence of similar transactions both prior and subsequent to the alleged offence is admissible as evidence of intention. It is incumbent on the prosecution to establish the offence by proof aliunde before calling into aid, by the application of Ss. 14 and 15 of the Evidence Act, evidence of similar transactions both prior and subsequent to the alleged offence, for the purpose of its being taken into consideration as a piece of relevant evidence in proving the knowledge or intention of the accused, if such knowledge or intention is a relevant fact, in proving the offence with which he is charged. In considering the question of the admissibility of a confession, the first thing to be considered is whether it is relevant or not. If it is not relevant owing to the existence of circumstances mentioned in S. 24 of the Evidence Act, it cannot be admitted in evidence either against the person confessing or against the other persons accused in the case. It does not matter how many true facts are mentioned in it. The question is not, in the first instance, whether it is true or false; what has to be considered is whether it was voluntary or was caused by some inducement. Where part of the confession is true, the Judge has to consider whether the confession can be used as evidence, if it was caused by some inducement. A confession is not defined in the Evidence Act but it has been judicially interpreted as meaning an admission made, at any time by a person charged with a crime stating, or suggesting the inference, that he committed that crime. The statement should however be considered as a whole. Voluntary character of.

———Ss. 24 and 26—Confession—Voluntary character of—Mere presence of Magistrate—If evidence of—Confession recorded without enquiry as to circumstances under which it is made—Admissibility.

There is no difference between a confession recorded under S. 164, Cr. P. Code, and an oral confession, in the precaution to be taken in ensuring that the confession is voluntarily made. The correct position is that whenever a Magistrate receives a confession from an accused in custody, he must be satisfied of its voluntary character. The mere presence of the Magistrate would not ipso facto make it voluntary. Where the accused was already under arrest when the Sub-Magistrate was

The Judge with whom the responsibility lies for acting upon the confession, should satisfy himself by putting searching questions to such witnesses as had anything to do with the confession The first question that ought to strike every judge is: "Why the accused made the confession"? It is important to ascertain from those in whose custody the accused was, the circumstances in which the question of confession first arose, how the accused expressed his willingness to be placed before the Magistrate and his readiness to make a confession. Similar questions arise as regards retraction. It is for the Judge to decide for himself whether prima facie the confession of the acoused appears to him to have been induced by threat or promise and for that reason to be inadmissible. If he comes to the conclusion that it is inadmissible, he must exclude it from the consideration of the jury. It is not the province of jury to decide the question of admissibility of evidence. On the other hand, if the Judge considers the confession admissible, it is his duty to point out to the jury that the fact that he considers the evidence as admissible does not necessarily mean that it is true and it is for jury to make up their minds whether they should accept the confession, and in doing so, they should naturally be guided to a large extent by their opinion on the question whether the confession was voluntary or not. EVIDENCE ACT (1872), S. 24—Retracted confession.

A retracted confession can no doubt be legally acted upon and made a basis of the conviction of the maker thereof, if it bears the ring of truth. But a Court of justice should by way of caution look for corroboration from independent quarters in order to be satisfied that it is true. Thus the one test of the genuineness and the truth of the confession is the corroborative evidence led by the prosecution in support of that confession and if the corroboration consists of disinterested witnesses or of such important circumstances as are sufficient in themselves to prove the connection of the accused with the crime, a Court of Law would be perfectly justified in believing the confession to be true. But if there is no corroboration at all or very little independent corroboration or if the corroboration is in such particulars only as do not connect the accused at all with the commission of the offence, then a Court in spite of the confession would be justified in giving the accused person the benefit of doubt, if he retracts the confession at the earliest possible opportunity. Where a Magistrate before recording the confession of an accused takes every precaution to protect his interests, namely, warns him against the risk that he was going to incur in making a confession and obtains from him a clear statement that he had not been put in fear or received any inducement and then the accused makes a deliberate confession of the crime, the confession, though subsequently retracted, in the absence of proof that it was forced out of the accused by torture or of a satisfactory explanation as to how he came to make it, if he was not guilty, is admissible in evidence. ——S. 24—Retracted confession — Sufficiency for conviction.

It is well settled, that a Court may convict an accused person on his own uncorroborated confession which has subsequently been retracted, provided that the Court is satisfied that the confession was made voluntarily and that it is true in fact. But, the Court is bound to take into consideration, the confession as a whole and not only a part of it. EVIDENCE ACT (1872), S. 24—Retracted confession.

———S. 24—Retracted confession — Sufficiency for conviction.

A Court is at liberty to base a conviction on the retracted confession of the accused, if it thinks, that it has a ring of truth about it. But it should be very slow to base a conviction upon such a confession, which is not corroborated by any other satisfactory evidence, which does not impress the Court and which does not explain any strong motive for the crime. (Nanavutty and Rachhpal Singh, JJ.) IMAMUDDIN v. EMPEROR. 10 Luck. 131=7 R.O. 70=150 I C. 862=35 Cr L J. 1154=11 O.W N. 950=1934 Cr.C. 1199=A.I R. 1934 Oudh 388.

———S. 24—Retracted confession — Sufficiency to base conviction—Voluntary nature—Presumption.

If a retracted confession bears the stamp of truth, the Court may base a conviction on the strength of it, but the greatest caution is necessary in such cases. When a confession is made by an accused person after he has been given an opportunity to think over this position, the Court may draw the presumption that it was voluntarily made. But that does not relieve the Court from its duty of carefully considering the nature of the confession and the value to be attached to it. It should very carefully scrutinize the confession and then decide for itself whether it is reliable and trustworthy When the Court finds that the confession is not true, and is made with the sole object of implicating others without any intention to implicate himself, it cannot be acted upon by the Court and a conviction cannot be based on it. (Rachhpal Singh and Thomas, JJ.) SHEORATAN v. EMPEROR. 10 Luck. 151=7 R O. 109=35 Cr.L. J. 1290=151 I.C 298=11 O W.N. 1012=1934 Cr C. 1279=A.I.R. 1934 Oudh 418.

———S. 24—Retracted confession—Value of.

Where a confession of the accused is confused in its composition and shows intrinsically that it is not a confession imposed on him by a Police Officer anxious to obtain evidence against the accused or other person and he does not allege that the confession was extorted from him by torture, it can be relied on so far his own actions on the date in question are concerned, even though it was retracted and there is no other evidence against him except his own confession. ———S. 24—Retracted confession—Value of.

There is no rule of law which compels a Court to raise an inference of improper inducement from the mere fact that the confession is retracted; nor is it an inflexible rule, that a retracted confession cannot be accepted as evidence of guilt without independent corroboration. The use to be made of it is a matter rather of prudence than of law. (Case-law ref.) (Makadevayya and Ramachandra Rao, JJ.) GOVERNMENT OF MYSORE v. BASAPPA GOWDA. 10 Mys.L.J 304.

———S. 25—Confession to police by person subsequently accused—Admissibility of.

The statement of witnesses to the police in the course of an investigation can only be used for only one purpose, i.e., as mentioned in the provisos to S. 162, Cr. P. Code. They cannot be used as evidence in order to convict the author of that statement. In order to amount to a confession within the meaning of S. 25 of the Evidence Act, it is not necessary that it should embody a direct or unequivocal admission of guilt. Nor is it necessary that definite accusation should have been formulated or pending against the person concerned at the time of his making the statement. The fact that the statement was made in the course of the investigation which led to his being subsequently accused of an offence is enough to bring the matter under S. 25. The test is the position of the person when it is proposed to prove the admission, not his position at the time when he is alleged to have made it. A confession made to a Police Officer is, therefore, absolutely inadmissible in evidence without any limitation or qualification. ——S. 27—Strict construction—Statement as to weapon with which murder was committed—Admissibility.

Per Smith, J.— S. 27 must be construed strictly and the statement that the hatchet produced was the one with which the murder was committed should not be allowed to come in evidence as it did not lead to the discovery of the hatchet.

Per Allsop, J.—The witness should as far as possible depose to the actual words used by the accused person, and if the words are, for instance, "the hatchet with which the murder was committed is in a nala, there is no reason why the words" with which the murder was committed," should be left out of the sentence in which the necessary information is given. If it was the intention of the legislature that words of this kind should be omitted, it is difficult to understand why the words "whether it amounts to a confession or not" should have been included in S. 27, because it is hard to conceive of any case where a bare statement that a certain article was in a certain place or in the possession of a certain person would amount to a confession at all. If all that a witness can prove is that the accused person said that a certain article was in a certain place that would amount to little more, if anything, than saying that the article was discovered in consequence of information given by the accused. Where the evidence of the approver is in conflict with the confession of the accused, that portion of the evidence of the approver may be rejected as unreliable; and where the evidence of the approver is in conformity with the confession of the co-accused, it may be deemed to receivecorroboration to that extent and may justify the conviction of the other accused. It would be far too dangerous to consider that a confession of a co-accused amounts to evidence against a person. The language of S. 30 of the Evidence Act does not justify a distinction between a confession made by an accused person before the trial and in the course of the trial. A confession made before the Court even at the close of the case for the prosecution can, therefore, be said to be a confession "proved" within the meaning of that section. This being so, it could legally be taken into consideration, that is to say, used as evidence. A.I.R. 1930 Bom. 354 and 134 I.C. 686, Foll.; 45 A 323; 54 M. 788 and A.I.R. 1929 Mad. 285, Not foll. The confession of a co accused is even worse in value than the sworn testimony of an accomplice and if it is necessary that the latter testimony should be corroborated independently both as to the crime and as to the criminal it is still more necessary that the confession of a co accused should be so corroborated. A retracted confession carries practically no weight as against a person other than maker; it is not made on oath, it is not tested by cross-examination, and its truth is denied by the maker himself, who has thus lied on one or other of the occasions. The very fullest corroboration would be necessary in such a case, far more than would be demanded for the sworn testimony of an accomplice on oath. Where not only did the confessing accused retract their confession but when pardons are offered to two of them with a view to their giving evidence as accomplices, they refused to accept such pardon.

Held, that the value of the evidence of the confessions as against the other co accused was much weakened and that the question, as to whether the confessions of the confessing accused afforded sufficient corroboration of one another to justify the convictions of the co-accused was one which required careful consideration. 28 Cal. 689, Foll.; 38 Cal. 559, Ref. The law on subject of retracted confessions is contained in S. 30 and the definition of proof in S. 3 of the Act. A retracted confession is evidence and there is no provision in S. 30 by which a confession is to be receivable in one way against one person and in another way against another. The use to be made by a Court of a confession whether retracted or not is a matter of procedure rather than law the business of the Court being to make up its mind in accordance with the dictates of commonsense whether it is safe to believe the confession or not. 29 All. 434 and 30 P.R. 1914 (Cr.), Foll. ———S. 30—Retracted confession—Value of as against co-accused.

Whatever value might be attached to the retracted confession of an accused person, its value against a co-accused is exceedingly weak and cannot be made the basis of a conviction unless it is materially corroborated. In considering this question, the point to be considered is whether the confession bears the stamp of truth. When it does not, and the confessor is a young man of about 20 years who takes particular care through the confession not to incriminate himself in any manner—so much so that it is no confession at all—and does not say anywhere that he himself committed any offence, it would be unsafe altogether to use a confession of this kind against the co-accused or to base a conviction it. It would be different in the case of a confession in which an accused person has admitted his own part in a crime; but when the confession incriminates only others and a studious attempt is made by the confessor to show that he took absolutely no part in the crime and to explain that his presence was only due to ertreaties or threats of the co-accused, the Court will not be justified in placing any reliance on the confession as against the co accused. Dying declaration.

———S. 32—Dying declaration—Acceptance in part—Permissibility.

Once a declaration falls under S. 32 it becomes relevant evidence and the Court must judge of the weight of that evidence on exactly the same principles as those upon which it acts in judging of the weight of other types of evidence. Of course the Court has always to bear in mind that a declaration admissible under S. 32 is not made on oath and is not the subject of cross-examination and therefore it is a weaker type of evidence than the evidence given by a witness in the witness-box and if a judge thought that part of a dying declaration was deliberately false, it is no doubt very improbable that in practice he would act on the other part of the declaration, at any rate without very definite corroboration. But it cannot be said, that because it transpires that something in a dying declaration is false, therefore the whole declaration must necessarily be disregarded. (*Beaumont, C. ———S. 32—Dying declaration—Corroboration when necessary.

There is no rule of law which requires that a dying declaration should not be acted upon unless it is corroborated; but the evidential value of a declaration relevant under S. 32 varies very much in accordance with the circumstances in which it is made. A dying declaration may be relevant under S. 32 although the man who makes it does not expect to die Generally speaking, however, a declaration relevant under S. 32 but not made by one in immediate expectation of death and not made in the presence of the accused, ought not to be acted upon unless there is some reliable corroboration. A dying declaration may be verbal or written. Nodding head and making signs to questions put together with the questions have been held to be verbal statements. If written, the precise statement made should be proved either by the person who recorded it or by some one who heard it. If a statement is recorded by a Magistrate, his mere signature is insufficient to make that statement admissible in evidence; there must be direct proof that such statement was made. So the record of the dying declaration by a Magistrate is admissible when the Magistrate was examined at the trial and the District Medical Officer who attended on the deceased also deposed about the substantial correspondence between the record and the dying statements. 7 All. 385; 49 C. 600; 49 C. 358; 6 C.W.N. 72; 7 Lah. 91; 52 C. 446, Ref. Before a pedigree said to have been prepared by a deceased member of the family can be admitted in evidence under S. 32 (5) it must be proved that it was either prepared by the deceased or that the deceased had that personal knowledge and belief which must be presumed in any statement of the deceased person which is admissible in evidence. It is only a pedigree which had been subjected to investigation many years prior to the institution of the litigation, in which it was questioned and which had been previously relied upon by competent authorities and which is supported by oral evidence, that can safely be accepted as correct. ———S. 32 (6)—Pedigree—Mahomedans—Practice of showing eldest son on right side—Inference.

Where the family indicated in the pedigree is not a family governed by the custom of primogeniture in the descent of property, there can be no motive in the preparation of the pedigree to place the name of the first born as the first on the right hand side and in the absence of sufficient material on record, there would be no justification for the inference that a pedigree of a family of similar status would be invariably prepared on a plan of descent by primogeniture. The eldest son is generally shown on the right side in the Mahomedan pedigrees but that was not an invariable practice. The practice of so showing the eldest son is borrowed from English system and was not followed in ancient pedigrees. ———S. 33, Prov. (1)—Object—"Representative in interest"—Meaning.

The person who is called by Prov. (1) a "representative in interest" of another is a person who was a party to the first proceedings. The first proviso requires that the party to the first proceeding should have represented in interest the party to the second proceeding in relation to the question in issue in the first proceeding to which "the facts which the evidence states" were relevant. It covers not only cases of privity in estate and succession of title, but also cases where both the following conditions exist: viz., (1) the interest of the relevant party to the second proceeding in the subject-matter of the first proceeding, is consistent with and not antagonistic to the interest therein of the relevant party to the first proceeding, and (2) the interest of both in the answer to be given to the particular question in issue in the first proceeding is identical. There may be other cases covered by the first proviso; but if both the above conditions are fulfilled, the relevant part to the first proceeding in fact represents in the first proceeding the relevant party to the second proceeding, in regard to his interest in relation to the particular question in issue in the first proceeding, and may grammatically and truthfully be described as a representative in interest of the party to the second proceeding. The words "regularly kept" are not synonymous with "correctly kept". They only mean that the account books should be kept in accordance with a certain fixed method or in some customary form. The term "regularly kept" has reference to the system of book-keeping, rather than to the truth or correctness of the entries in the account books. Where the books show that the dealings of the firm were as a rule entered from day to day in the day-book, they contain daily totals of the debit and credit entries and a cash balance is struck every day and the entries in the day-books are posted up in the ledger, the mere fact that it contains some minor mistakes cannot make it inadmissible, though the defects may affect its value. The accused were charged under S. 366, Penal Code. The prosecution, to prove that the girl was below 16 years of age produced certain inoculation and vaccination registers and her school register and the evidence was that the entries therein related to a girl who was said to be the girl concerned and that the age as entered in the registers was given by her father The Judge in charging the jury directed them that the people who made the entries in the registers did not know the ages they recorded so that these documents would be no evidence at all unless somebody knowing the age gave it, in which case they would corroborate him if he spoke to the age himself.

Held, that S. 35 of the Evidence Act only lays down that such entries, when they state a fact in issue or relevant fact, are themselves relevant that is, are among the class of facts which the law allows to be proved and when the Judge admitted the entries and put them before the jury, his comment on their importance did not amount to a serious misdirection as the weight to be attached to them was purely a question for the jury to decide. ———Ss. 40 and 42—Scope — Judgment not falling within Ss. 40 to 42—Relevancy.

The Evidence Act itself does not draw a distinction between a judgment which is not inter partes and a judgment which is inter partes, except where the judgment is clearly res judicata. A judgment other than a judgment referred to in Ss. 40 to 42 may be admissible to prove that a right was asserted or denied under S. 13 of the Evidence Act or to explain or introduce facts in issue or to explain the history of the case. But there is no provision in the Evidence Act which would warrant the view that the actual decision or the findings arrived at in a previous judgment can be used as evidence to decide the points which are in issue in a particular case. Such a decision may by virtue of the specific provisions operate as res judicata or be relevant as a pronouncement on matters of public nature, but otherwise it is no better than a mere opinion expressed on the issues involved in a particular case and the Evidence Act is clear that 'opinion' will be relevant in those cases only which are specifically referred to in the Act and in no others. ——S. 41—Judgment in rem—Order in prior insolvency proceedings not inter partes—Finality—If conclusive.

After the sale in execution of certain property, the judgment-debtor was declared insolvent on petition presented and admitted prior to the sale. The receiver took proceedings under S. 4 of the Provincial Insolvency Act alleging that the sale was attended with fraud, but the Court found that there was no fraud. Some years later, the insolvent together with a creditor again applied under S. 4 of the Provincial Insolvency Act for a declaration that the execution sale was invalid and contended that the executing Court had no jurisdiction to sell by reason of S. 52 of the Provincial Insolvency Act. The latter contention, though raised in the prior proceedings by the receiver, was not dealt with by the Judge in insolvency.

Held, that under S. 41 of the Evidence Act, the prior decision, being a final order or judgment of a competent Court in insolvency had the effect of a judgment in rem, and could not be disturbed by subsequent applications, though not between the same parties; that the receiver not having taken any steps to appeal from the order made against him, and the execution purchaser having been left in possession for some years, it was not right that the purchaser should be prejudiced either on behalf of the insolvent or on behalf of the creditors by a fresh attempt to set aside the sale which took place long ago after a previous attempt had failed. In the case of wakf, as soon as the property is dedicated, it loses its private character altogether and at once acquires a public character and consequently any right claimed thereto will be a public right. The matter of wakf, therefore, is a matter of public importance within S. 42 of the Evidence Act. Consequently a previous judgment relating to such property is relevant in a suit bearing on the property though not between the same parties to find out the history of the transaction and the intention of the executant of the document i.e., that the house was to be treated as wakf. An expert witness, however impartial he may wish to be, is likely to be unconsciously prejudiced in favour of the side which calls him. The opinion of an expert by itself may be relevant but would carry little weight with a Court unless it is supported by a clear statement of what he noticed and on what he based his opinion. The expert should, if he expects his opinion to be accepted, put before the Court all the materials which induced him to come to his conclusion, so that the Court although not expert, may form its own judgment on those materials. It is not the duty or even the function of a Magistrate to decide beforehand whether relevant evidence if produced would influence his opinion one way or the other. That is a matter which should be settled only after the evidence has been recorded and read in the case. Moreover it is not only the Magistrate who is concerned in the matter but the appellate Court also has to consider whether the evidence does or does not affect the case before it. EVIDENCE ACT (1872), S 71.

The evidence which was tendered to prove the mortgage deed consisted firstly in calling a witness B. He was one of three persons whose signatures appeared on the deed of mortgage as attesting witnesses. But when B was called, he said that the executant had not put her thumb-impression on the mortgage deed in his presence and that he merely put his signature on the mortgage deed as the kavinda of the lady asked him to do so. The plaintiff also tendered his own evidence to the effect that the lady put her thumb-impression on the mortgage deed in his presence and in the presence of two other attesting witnesses. But the plaintiff did not state that those attesting witnesses made their signatures in the presence of the lady.

Held, that the evidence of B and of the plaintiff was not sufficient for the purpose of S. 3 of the T. P. Act.

Held, further, that the plaintiff's evidence was not admissible under S. 71, because the plaintiff had not complied with S. 68 of the Evidence Act. (Mukerji and Bennet, JJ.) BANWARI LAL v. GOPI NATH. I.R. 1931 All. 397=131 I.C. 557=1931 A.L.J. 342=A.I.R. 1931 All. 411.

In the case of ancient documents, the original of which has been lost, it would be impossible to adduce any direct evidence of their execution and therefore for considerations of justice and equity, it is necessary to invoke every legitimate presumption which can be reasonably raised upon the facts and circumstances of the particular case. Although no presumption of law can be made under S. 90 as regards the genuineness of such documents, yet the Court can make a presumption of fact al out their genuineness under S. 114, if such presumption is justified by the proved facts and circumstances of the case. 62 I.A. 180 = 69 M.L.J. 225 (P C) Disc. ——S. 90—Ancient document—Presumption of due execution and attestation as to—Registrar signing endorsement—If purports to attest

S. 90 of the Evidence Act simply says that the Court may presume in the case of a document executed or attested that it was duly executed or attested by the persons by whom it purports to be executed or attested. But when a Registrar makes his endorsement on the back of a document, he is simply carrying out his statutory duties under the Registration Act and makes the signature alio intuitu and is not purporting to attest the document. The Registration Act does not require the Registrar to affix his signature to the endorsement in the presence of the executant. And though the endorsement shows that the Registrar received from the executant a personal acknowledgment of his signature, in the absence of evidence that the Registrar signed in the presence of the executant, no presumption can possibly be made under S. 90 of the Evidence Act that the signature of the Registrar was affixed in the presence of the executant or that the document was duly attested, even if the document is over 30 years old. Under S. 90, what the Court may presume is that the signature and every other part of a document, which purports to be in the handwriting, of a particular person is that in person's handwriting. In the case of imaginary persons like Imams, there can be no question of signatures and handwriting and an attempt to apply S. 90 to such documents as Imami letters is merely futile. 15 N.L.R. 192, Ref. ——S. 90—Applicability—Production of copy—Presumption as to original—If can be drawn.

S. 90 of the Evidence Act clearly requires the production before the Court of the particular document in regard to which the Court may make the statutory presumption. If the document produced is a copy, admitted as secondary evidence under S. 65 of the Act, the signatures authenticating the copy may, if the document is produced from proper custody and is over thirty years old, be presumed to be genuine. But the production of copy will not be sufficient to justify the presumption of a due execution of the original under S. 90. It is not compulsory upon any Court before whom a document purporting or proved to be thirty years old is produced to presume that the said document is genuine. The section only gives a discretion to the Court that if under the circumstances established in a case it considers proper to raise such presumption, it can do so. The Courts should be very careful about raising any presumption under S. 90 in favour of old deeds of shankalap which are produced practically for the first time during the trial of suits in which under-proprietary rights are set up on the basis of those deeds. ———S. 90—Discretion of trial Court—Interference in appeal.

When a document has once been admitted in evidence under S. 90 by the trial Court, the appellate Court is, as a rule, slow in interfering with the discretion of the trial Court. ———S. 90—Discretion of trial Court—Interference by appellate Court.

The raising or not of a presumption under S. 90 as to the genuineness of a document is a matter for judicial discretion; and the Court must apply its mind in each case to the question whether it is a proper case to raise such presumption. When the lower Court does not exercise a proper judicial discretion, in raising the presumption of the genuineness of a document, ordinarily it is not proper for the appellate Court to overrule the discretion of the trial Court; but where it is constrained to do so, the party producing the document should be given an opportunity of supporting the presumption. S. 90 does not contain any restriction, that a presumption should not be drawn thereunder if the person claiming title under the document in question is out of possession or has not actually signed or thumb marked the document himself. As regards the question of possession it is for the Court to decide in each case whether the custody from which the document is produced is or is not proper and if it considers the custody to be proper, it can raise the presumption. Held, that as it was an agricultural lease, it could be made orally, that the oral lease became complete on the acceptance by the selling officer of the defendant's bid, that the document which came into existence subsequently did not supersede the oral lease, that the auction list and muchalika having been suppressed by the plaintiff, he could not be permitted to establish their contents by secondary evidence and that the plaintiff was not entitled to the relief prayed for. Ill. (b) to S. 91, Evidence Act, could not have been intended to abrogate or annul the well-settled rule of English law, that a negotiable instrument operates only as a conditional discharge. The effect of the illustration is only to exclude all proof other than the instrument itself. But that does not mean that the original debt is superseded by the instrument which, in its very essence, is only a conditional payment. In the case of an invalid note, there is not even that conditional payment. Even where the loan is not antecedent to and independent of the promissory note, but contemporaneous with it, the lender can, when the note turns out to be invalid as being insufficiently stamped, fall back upon the original contract, express or implied, arising from the loan. ———S. 91—Promissory note—Proof of oral contract of loan.

Where money is lent on terms contained in a promissory note given at the time of the loan, the promissory note and the lending being part and parcel of the same transaction, the lender suing to recover money so lent must prove the terms of the promissory note. If for any reason, such as the absence of a proper stamp, the promissory note is not admissible in evidence, the plaintiff is not entitled to set up a case independent of the note in view of the provisions of S. 91. He cannot recover the money by proving orally the terms of the contract. ———S. 91—Promissory note—Renewal—Later note insufficiently stamped—Suit on old note—Bar.

The plaint as originally brought was based on a promissory note of 1925. Subsequently however the plaint was amended and the suit was based on an earlier promissory note of 1922. It appeared that the later note was not properly stamped and was therefore inadmissible in evidence. It was further shown that the later note was merely in renewal of liability under the original note and there was an endorsement of discharge to that effect.

Held, that S. 91 of the Evidence Act was not a bar to the suit of the plaintiff based on the earlier transaction, which was distinct and separate from the execution of the later note. ———S. 91—Promissory note—Suit for money due under—Plaintiff if can rely on ancillary receipt.

Where a party institutes a suit for the recovery of money due upon the basis of a promissory note he must produce that promissory note or give a satisfactory explanation as to why he is unable to produce it. If there is a satisfactory explanation of the absence of the promissory note, then in justice and in equity he is entitled to rely upon a relative and ancillary document such as a receipt which formed part of the same document upon which both the promissory note and the receipt were inscribed. But where he is concealing the promissory note from the Court, and withholding from the Court information which the Court is entitled to have in a consideration of the dispute between the parties, he is not entitled to rely upon any such relative and ancillary document as the receipt which relates the promissory note. The party having recourse to law to enforce a ———S. 91—Promissory note—Suit on—Instrument not duly stamped—Proof of loan.

If the whole of the terms of the agreement under which the loan is made are embodied in a promissory note, no evidence can be adduced in proof of the terms of the contract except the document itself; and if the promissory note is not duly stamped and is inadmissible, the suit of the creditor must fail, because he is not in a position to prove the debt. But a promissory note is given prima facie only as conditional payment; and when so given and taken and that term is not set out therein, the instrument does not contain all the terms of the agreement of the loan; and therefore S. 91 of the Evidence Act does not apply. Even if the handing over of the money and the giving of the promissory note are simultaneous or part of the same transaction, it does not necessarily follow that the promissory note is the sole repository of the terms of the agreement or that the lender cannot recover upon proof of the original consideration. It is not the time when, but the terms upon which, the loan is made that matters. The Court in each case must ascertain the terms of the agreement upon which the loan was made. The recital in a bond or in a promissory note that consideration has passed amounts only to an admission of the fact, and like any other admission may be disproved as being incorrect. The admission no doubt throws the burden of proof on the party whose admission it is, to prove that the admission is wrong, but nonetheless it is open to the party to prove that his own admission is in fact incorrect Proof of absence of consideration for a document in suit does not amount to varying the terms of the contract and in no way militates against the main provision of S. 92 of the Evidence Act and in any case, proviso No. 1 clearly allows such evidence to be adduced. So S. 92 does not apply. Decree of Court.

A decree is an adjudication by a Court of the rights of the parties litigating before it; it is not an act of the parties but an act of the Court, and derives its binding force or validity from the authority of the Court and not from any agreement or contract between the parties. Hence a decree or its terms cannot be varied or modified except by the Court; it is a matter of procedure and not of rules of evidence. The parties cannot by their agreement alone vary or modify the terms of the decree, whether the agreement be oral or written. S. 92 has therefore no application to decrees. 50 Mad. 897 = 53 M.L. Cases where the defence taken is that there has been contemporaneous oral agreement, varying the terms of an instrument, or a subsequent oral agreement varying the terms of a contract or grant required by law to be in writing, or of a registered instrument, are essentially different from cases where the defence is that the instrument was never intended by the parties to be acted upon. EVIDENCE ACT (1872), S. 92—Intention of parties.

The cases in which parol evidence when objected to is, apart from fraud or mistake, receivable to correct written instruments are cases, where, for example, the evidence supplements but does not contradict the terms of the deed, where the provisions of the deed leave the question doubtful, whether merely a mortgage and not an out and out sale was intended or where the language sought to be explained in evidence is language in an ordinary conveyancing form not exhaustively accurate but without an actual mis statement of fact. Apart from such cases, however, the general rule is that where words of any written instrument are free from ambiguity in themselves and where external circumstances do not create any doubt or difficulty as to the proper application of the words to claimants under the instrument or the subject-matter to which the instrument relates, such instrument is always to be construed according to the strict plain common meaning of the words themselves and evidence dehors the instrument for the purpose of explaining it according to the surmised or alleged intention of the parties to the instrument is utterly inadmissible. In 1917, the respondent, who was the owner of certain leasehold properties executed a deed by which, in consideration of a sum of $16,000 the payment of which was acknowledged, he assigned his right, title and interest in the properties in favour of his son and another as joint tenants. The deed contained all the covenants usually inserted in a sale deed. It was duly attested, stamped ad valorem on the amount of the purchase-money and registered under the Hong Kong Registration Ordinance. On 7th March, 1929, the appellant advanced $25,000 to the son of the respondent on the security of his interest in the undivided moiety of the property, having searched the register at the Land Office and satisfied himself of the sufficiency of the security offered. On the 28th March, 1929, the respondent brought the present suit for a declaration that the mortgage was not binding on the property. He gave evidence to the effect that the deed of assignment was "an elaborate make believe," that it was not intended to confer any beneficial interest at all on his son, that the other purchaser under the deed was himself under a different name, that the consideration was never paid and that the deed was only executed by him to mark the properties so that in case of his death the properties might be handed to his son later on. It was however, no part of his case that there was any resulting trust created in his favour.

Held, that the evidence of the respondent was in direct contradiction to the express terms of the written instrument and was therefore inadmissible. EVIDENCE ACT (1872), S. 92—Mortgage.

Where a plaint makes no claim for rectification regard ing the rate of interest contained in the mortgage instrument, the Proviso (1) to S. 92 of the Evidence Act does not empower a plaintiff suing on an unambiguous, unreformed and registered deed to lead evidence to show that by a mistake a term has been omitted from the deed, unless the mistake is such a one as would found a claim for rectification or cancellation, and in such case the evidence will have to be tested by the same standards of equity and the claim will be open to the same equitable defences as though the action claimed rectification. The burden of proof is heavily on the person seeking rectification and an effective bar to his claim is laches on his part. The fact that terms of an instrument as they stand are so unusual as to show that the document cannot mean what it says, is not any ground for adding terms to an unambiguous deed. ——S. 92, Proviso (3)—Oral agreement—Separate oral agreement that executant should be treated only as surety—Admissibility.

The words "any obligation" in the third proviso to S. 92 mean any obligation whatever under the contract, and not some particular obligation which the contract may contain. The parties may not vary a written statement, but they may show that they never came to an agreement at all and that the signed paper was never intended to be record of the terms of the agreement, for they never had agreeing minds ; or they may show that a written contract, which has no date, was not intended to operate from its delivery but from a future uncertain period; or they may show that the parties never intended to be an agreement until a condition precedent was fulfilled. But where a contract embodied in a compromise is executed by several persons prima facie undertaking liability in unqualified terms, the proviso does not contemplate a division or splitting up of the contract, as that would be to vary the contract as a whole. So an understanding that no obligation would ever arise upon the agreement or an agreement that some of the executants would be liable only as sureties is not provable under the proviso. 8 C.W.N. 101 ; 5 Rang 168 ; 45 M.L.J. 91, Foll. The plaintiff along with others had jointly mortgaged her share in the ancestral property before partition. After partition she built a house on the property mortgaged. The mortgagee claimed the house as accession to the mortgage. The mortgagor relied on an agreement whereby the mortgagee orally agreed to release her as she had paid him her share of the mortgage debt.

Held, that as under the mortgage joint liability had been created the mortgage security was indivisible. Therefore any agreement between a co-mortgagor and mortgagee in derogation of the security was inadmissible in evidence being one to vary the terms of the original agreement. Waiver

———S. 92—Waiver—Mortgage deed—Stipulation for default rate of interest — Subsequent oral agreement waiving default—Proof—Permissibility.

A mortgage deed provided for interest at 7½ per cent. per annum on the principal amount. It further provided that the mortgagor should pay interest at 9 per cent. per annum in case the mortgagor committed default either in the regular amount of interest or in the repayment of the principal amount at the end of two years. The mortgagor committed default and the question as to the interest payable was raised in a proceeding for apportionment of the compensation amount for the land acquired. The mortgagor pleaded a subsequent oral agreement whereby the mortgagee agreed to waive the default rate of interest both for the past and for the future. He also alleged that payments had been made in pursuance of the alleged agreement and that the entire claim for interest had thus been discharged.

Held, that S. 92 of the Evidence Act was no bar to the plea of discharge in pursuance of the agreement being raised as a defence, because there was no variance of the original contract but a mere remission of part of the debt when it became payable and the arrangement is put forward merely as a promise of grace imposing no legal obligation; to probabilize the alleged acceptance of a lesser rate of interest. The arrangement pleaded was such as that specified in S. 63 of the Contract Act and was admissible as evidence of actual remission and full satisfaction, though not as evidence of a binding agreement to waive his rights. "There is nothing to prevent proof of actual waiver of past breaches, whether or not that is in pursuance of a promise to waive or not. A promise of grace to waive future breaches may be proved but, not being binding, is of no value unless performance has been actually waived. A binding agreement to waive future performance cannot be proved." 58 M.L.J. 503, Appr.; 52 M.L.J. 224, Expl.; 26 M. 195; 27 M. 368, 30 M. 231; 42 M. 42 (F.B.), 44 B. 55 and 55 M.L.J. 1. Ref. to. EVIDENCE ACT (1872), S. 94.

A consent decree is still a contract which must be construed as such although it has the sanctity of a judgment. Only under one set of circumstances could the parties be allowed to give evidence as to what a consent decree meant or to give evidence to assist the Court in coming to their conclusion; and that would be where there is a latent ambiguity. If ambiguity is on the face of the document itself, evidence is not admissible to enable Courts to construe it. Hence where a Court has any difficulty as to what the decree means either by reason of an ambiguous sentence or an apparent contradiction arising out of that, no evidence is admissible. If there is any patent ambiguity in a document, extraneous evidence is altogether forbidden under S. 93 of the Evidence Act. And when the language is plain and unambiguous it is not permissible to produce other evidence to show that there was a different intention on the part of the executant. In construing a document, the document must be taken as a whole, and if there is inconsistency between two parts of it, the case is one of ambiguity to which S. 97 of the Evidence Act will apply. Where, therefore, the language of a sale-deed, so far as the boundaries are concerned indicates that the whole of a grove is sold, but another part of it referring to the survey number and area indicates that only part of it is sold, evidence is clearly admissible to show whether it was meant that the deed should convey the whole of the grove or only part of it. ———Ss. 101 and 103—Rules governing burden of proof.

The difficulty as to the placing of burden of proof arises from the fact that the terms "burden of proof", and what is sometimes termed "onus probandi" are sometimes confused. When issues have been framed on the pleadings and the preliminary examination of the parties, if they have been examined, the case rests at a certain point at which, if no further evidence is led, one party has got to lose. On that party is the "onus probandi," sometimes called the "right to begin," That party has to make out a prima facie case which, if unrebutted, will ensure success for him. When, however, all evidence on both sides has been recorded, a second state is reached and this is where the point of view of the Judge comes in and it is necessary to find where is the burden of proof. To determine on whom the burden of proof lay it is necessary to ascertain with precision upon what proposition of fact or of law the parties were at variance. (Bagulay, J.) MAUNG PE v. C.T.M.N. Held, in a suit by the plaintiff for specific performance of the agreement of 26th November, 1926, (1) that although under S. 54 of the Transfer of Property Act, the plaintiff's agreement for sale did not of itself create any interest in or charge on the property, he was entitled, under S. 27 (b) of the Specific Relief Act, to enforce the agreement against the subsequent transferee of the property; (2) that under S. 27 (b) of the Specific Relief Act (as read with Ss. 103 and 106 of the Indian Evidence Act), the burden of proof primarily lay on the later transferee to bring himself within the exception in S. 27 (b) and to establish (a) payment of his money, (b) his good faith, and (c) absence of notice to him of the original contract. ———S. 103—Succession to estate—Proof of relationship.

When a person claims to succeed another on ground of relationship with the latter, he should establish not only his own relationship with the last male holder, but also, prima facie, that no nearer heirs are alive. Where the Court cannot arrive at that conclusion on the evidence of the plaintiff, either because he is not in a position to speak on the subject or because his evidence is manifestly untrue, it should be satisfied by other credible evidence that no nearer heir exists before the defendant is called upon to substantiate his definite case that he is a nearer heir. Where both parties have adduced evidence, the question of onus loses all importance and the Court should record a definite finding as to whether the defendant is the nearer heir. The question may assume some importance where the Court has to reject the evidence adduced on either side as absolutely untrustworthy. In such a case the plaintiff's title can prevail only if the Court is in a position to find not only that he is related to the last male holder as he alleges, but also that no nearer heir is alive. child; in other words, it is not the opportunity of access that matters but sexual intercourse.

There are two presumptions, one rebuttable, the other irrrebuttable. First, there is a presumption to start with, in favour of the legitimacy of a child born during wedlock, in other words, there is a presumption that the husband had intercourse with the wife at the time the child must have been conceived. But this is a rebuttable presumption and evidence may be adduced to show that there was in fact no access, that is to say, no sexual intercourse. The second presumption is this, if sexual intercourse be proved, the law will not permit an enquiry whether the husband or some other man was more likely to be the father of the child, the presumption to be drawn here becomes an irrebuttable one.

Where the fact, that the husband and wife continued to live near each other and in the same village, proved of course that there were opportunities of access, the circumstances based upon credible evidence that the child, whose legitimacy was disputed was born three years after a so-called divorce effected between the parents by a panchayat consequent upon a suspicion of unchastity of the mother, would make it extremely improbable that they had sexual intercourse and the presumption of legitimacy arising from the birth of the plaintiff during wedlock would thereby be rebutted. ———S. 112—Non access — Burden and nature of proof.

S. 112 lays a heavy burden on the contesting defendants of proving or 'showing' non-access but such proof is not different from any other species of proof under the Act, namely, 'when after considering the matters before it, the Court either believes' that there was non access, "or considers its existence so probable that a prudent man ought in the circumstances of the particular case to act upon the supposition that it exists." It is not necessary—in fact it is not possible in most cases—for a party to prove a negative by positive evidence. The wife had been, for some years prior to the birth of the child the paternity of which was in question, living apart from her husband in a village about 9 miles from the place of her husband's residence. She was living with her paramour. Her husband used occasionally to go to that village to buy cattle. The lower Court held that non-access had not been made out.

Held, that the evidence was sufficient to prove non-access and that the lower Court erred in holding that non-access cannot be proved, so long as the parties were within reasonable distance of each other, unless there was the evidence of a witness available who can account for every minute of the party's time. Such proof would practically be impossible.

Held, further, that in a case of disputed legitimacy there is nothing contrary to law in the mother of the child, whose paternity is denied, in giving evidence as to access or non access by her husband (Wallace and Stone, JJ.) MAYANDI ASARI v. SAMI ASARI. 55 Mad. 292 = 135 I.C. 580 = I.R. 1932 Mad. 164 = 1931 M.W N. 1278 = 34 L.W. 884 = A.I.R. 1932 Mad. 44 = 61 M L.J. 874.

In dealing with a question of non-acces, under S. 112 of the Evidence Act, in the case of a child marriage among Hindus, much depends on the question whether the case presented on either side is reconcilable with the established customs and usages of Hindus as regards child marriages. Plaintiff claimed to be the legitimate son of one C.S. The defendants denied that he was a legitimate son of C.S. It was proved that the families of the plaintiff's alleged father and mother were about 20 miles distant from each other ; that the gauna (consummation) and thauna ceremonies were not performed, because the plaintiff's mother was discovered to be pregnant as the result of an illicit connection, that C.S. and his family repudiated the plaintiff's mother and never acknowledged the plaintiff as the son of C.S., and that both plaintiff and his mother continued to reside in the latter's father's house and never went to the village of C S. It was also neither proved nor suggested that the husband C.S. could have had intercourse with the wife before the gauna ceremony, which would never have been permitted by the respective families and was practically rendered impossible by the fact that the husband and wife lived in villages far apart from one another.

Held, that the defendants had sufficiently discharged the onus of proving non-acces under S. 112 and that the plaintiff could not be held to be the legitimate son of his mother's husband, C S. ———S. 112—Presumption of legitimacy—Rebuttal—Non-access—Proof—Adultery of wife.

The effect of S. 112 is this: there is a presumption and a very strong one, though a rebuttable one, that a child born in lawful wedlock is the legitimate child of the mother's husband. When once access or intercourse by the husband is proved, no evidence will be allowed to show that the child is not the child of the husband, that is to say, the presumption to be drawn becomes an irrebuttable one. But the Court has in each case to weigh the evidence and answer the question: has that presumption been rebutted by proper evidence that such access did not take place between the husband and the wife at the time when the child must have been conceived, as by the laws of nature is necessary for the man to be in fact the father of the child? This is essentially a question of fact and must be dealt with as any other question of fact is. 61 M. L. J. 874, Foll. Where the parents married in 1897, but the wife deserted the husband in three months thereafter and lived with a paramour near her husband's village and the evidence was that all through she had been living with the paramour and there had been no kind of access between the husband and the wife, it was held that the presumption as to the legitimacy of a son born in 1901 was, in the circumstances, rebutted, (Venkatasubba Rao, J.) SIVAKAMI AMMAL v. KOOLYANDI CHETTIAR. 149 I.C. 953 = 6 R.M. 661 = A.I.R. 1934 Mad 318 = 66 M.L.J. 283.

———S. 112—Scope—Divorce proceedings on ground of adultery of wife—Proof of non access—Evidence by husband—Admissibility—Rule in Russel v. Russel—Applicability in India.

There is a presumption in law that the child of a married woman was begotten by her husband and neither a husband nor a wife is permitted, with the possible object or possible result of proving that a child born to the wife during wedlock is not the child of the husband, to give evidence showing or tending to show that they did not have sexual relations with each other at the time when the child could have been conceived. This rule as enunciated in Russel v. Russel is applicable not only to cases in which the legitimacy of the child is directly in issue, but also in proceedings instituted in consequence of adultery. The rule excludes evidence by the husband on the point of non access; though non-access can, however, be proved by evidence aliunde. The law is the same in India as in England; and the wording of S. 112 of the Evidence Act in in no way conflicts with the rule of law as enunciated in Russel v. Russel. (*Costello, M. C. The fact that cloths with blood-stains are discovered in the house of the accused in a murder trial does not entitle the Court to make any presumption against the accused as to his guilt or as to the stains being of human blood, though the cloths admittedly belonged to the decreased. If the prosecution proves that any stain of human blood is found on the cloths, the accused might be called on to explain the fact, but when the prosecution failed and there was no evidence to prove that the stains were of human blood, the Court is wrong in making a presumption. In a prosecution for an offence under S. 377, I. P. Code, the complainant, a boy, who is found to have been a willing party, must be regarded as an accomplice; and it is not therefore safe to convict the accused on the evidence of the complainant boy, unless his evidence is corroborated in material particulars. The rule of the Court which requires corroboration of the evidence of an accomplice as against each accused applies with very little force to a case in which the accused is charged with extorting a bribe from other persons. The objections usually arising to the evidence of an accomplice do not really apply where the alleged accomplice, that is, the person paying the bribe, is not a willing participant in the offence, but is really a victim of that offence. In bribery cases the persons who pay the bribe and those who act as intermediaries are the only persons who can ordinarily be expected to give evidence about it. It is not possible to expect absolutely independent evidence about the payment of a bribe. (*Beaumont, C. On the one hand a conviction founded on the uncorroborated evidence of one or more accomplices alone is valid in law but on the other hand the evidence of accomplices should not be left to a jury without such directions and observations from the Judge as the circumstances of the case may require. To let the evidence of approvers go to a jury without giving them proper warning is a misdirection. For a Judge, to withdraw consideration of the guilt or innocence of the accused from the jury by telling them that a conviction cannot be based upon uncorroborated testimony of an approver would be no less a misdirection and directly contrary to the statute. The Judge is bound to caution the jury and to advise them that generally speaking the natural presumption for them to make is that the evidence of the approvers is unreliable though they are not compelled in law to act on the presumption. EVIDENCE ACT (1872), S. 114. Ill. (b).

Per S. K. Ghose, J.—It is unsafe to rely on the testimony of an accomplice without independent corroboration, both as to the crime and as to the identity of the criminal. It has been held in some cases that it is not illegal to base a conviction on the uncorroborated testimony of an accomplice or upon such testimony if it is corroborated by other accomplice evidence. But that is not tantamount to saying that independent corroboration is not necessary, or that the corroboration of one tainted evidence by another tainted evidence is independent corroboration. Merely because a particular thing is not illegal is no reason for doing that particular thing; the question is what is just and proper. The duty of the Court is not merely to record a conviction that is not illegal, but it must record a conviction that is properly based. The rule of law requiring an independent corroboration is a rule of caution applying to all accomplice evidence. That rule is expressly confirmed in India by S. 114, Ill. (b) of the Evidence Act, while in England it is based on principles derived from the judicial experience of ages. The qualification to Ill. (b) of S. 114 only points out that in a particular case there may be circumstances showing previous concert among accomplices to be highly improbable, which may lessen the degree of independent corroboration required. But these circumstances have themselves to be proved by independent evidence, and it does not make the rule of caution inapplicable. The fact that the accomplice giving evidence has been convicted already is a matter which may not be left out of account, but the fact remains that an accomplice is an accomplice, and he ought to be corroborated by other evidence.

Per Henderson, J.—A rule of law is not the same thing as a rule of prudence. The rule of law contained in S. 114 Ill. (b) of the Evidence Act only says that an accomplice is to be corroborated in material particulars. That is not the same thing as to say that he is to be corroborated by a witness who is not himself an accomplice. It is opposed to all common sense to lay down that in a case in which the rule of prudence does not apply, the Court is precluded from acting on evidence which it believes to be true, though it is evidence given by an accomplice. But in order that the evidence of accomplices may be safely relied on as mutually corroborative, the Court must have the guarantee that they were not acting in concert or that they had no opportunities of consultation or that there was no bargain between them and the prosecution to the effect that they might be dealt with leniently if they agreed to give evidence. The confessional statement of an accomplice is accepted only with great caution and after the closest scrutiny and is not accepted against any individual person unless it is sufficiently and satisfactorily corroborated. Although it is not illegal to convict on a uncorroborated statement of an accomplice there is a consensus of opinion that a conviction on the uncorroborated statement of an accomplice is rarely justifiable. An approver is a man of the very lowest character who has thrown to the wolves his erstwhile associates and friends in order to save his own skin. And by this betrayal he has purchased his liberty, he is a criminal himself and his evidence must be received with very great deal of caution, if not suspicion. It should also be noted that the approver can easily substitute an innocent man for the person who was actually participating with him in a particular crime. That danger must be guarded against and the prosecution must prove not only that the approver had an accomplice but his accomplice was as a matter of fact the accused persons and no other. Furthermore his evidence must be corroborated in important and material particulars (Agha Haidar, J.) INDAR DATT v. EMPEROR. I R. 1931 Lah 537 =132 I C. 185=32 Cr.L J. 818=1931 Cr.C. 648= A.I R. 1931 Lah. 408

It is a salutary rule that the evidence of an accomplice (or approver) should be corroborated. It is essential that the Court which has to estimate the value of the evidence of an approver should bear in mind that salutary rule. When the trial takes place before a Judge and jury, it is the duty of the Judge to warn the jury that it is unsafe to act upon the uncorroborated evidence of an accomplice. Similarly, where the trial takes place before a Court which is a Judge of both law and facts, that Court should rightly and properly warn itself that it is unsafe to act on such testimony. The question whether the evidence of an approver or accomplice has been sufficiently corroborated is, however, largely a matter for the Court which is trying the case. (*Costello, Panckridge and M.C. ——S. 114, Ill. (b)—Accomplice's evidence—Corroboration required—Nature and extent of.

It is a well established rule of practice, practically amounting to a rule of law, to require corroboration of the statement of an accomplice connecting the accused person with the crime; but corroboration is not required in all details. The evidence in corroboration must be independent which affects the accused by connecting or tending to connect him with the crime. "The corroboration need not be direct evidence that the accused committed the crime, it it is sufficient if it is merely circumstantial evidence of his connection with the crime." It is not also necessary that it should relate to the actual commission of the crime. What is necessary is, corroboration in material particulars which will satisfy the Court of the truth of the story related by the accomplice in so far as it implicates the accused. ——S. 114, Ill. (b)—Accomplice's evidence—Corroboration—When not required.

The evidence of an accomplice is admissible and conviction is not illegal because it proceeds upon the uncorroborated testimony of an accomplice. But the presumption allowed by Illus. (b), S. 114, that an accomplice is unworthy of credit unless he is corroborated in material particulars, has become a rule of practice of almost universal application. This rule cannot however override the statutory provision. It is neither wise nor feasible to convert what was in its origin and is under the Act a cautionary rule of practice into an artificial rule of law. The principal reasons for holding that an accomplice is unworthy of credit are as follows: (1) because an accomplice is likely to swear falsely in order to shift the fault from himself; (2) because an accomplice, as a participator in crime, and consequently an immoral person is likely to disregard the sanctity of an oath; and (3) because he gives his evidence under the promise of a pardon or in the expectation of an implied pardon, if he discloses all he knows against those with whom he acted criminally, and this hope would lead him to favour the prosecution. Therefore in a case where these reasons are absent, there would generally be no objection whatsoever to convict an accused person on the uncorroborated testimony of an accomplice. The question as to whether corroboration is necessary, and, if so, to what extent is a question to be decided on the facts of each particular case. Much depends on the nature of the offence, the extent of the complicity of the witness in it and the circumstances under which the accomplice makes his statement. EVIDENCE ACT (1872), S. 114, Ill. (b).

The corroboration falls under two heads: (1) general corroboration, and (2) special corroboration connecting each of the accused with the offence. The first shows or is meant to show that the man is truthful and has a good memory. With regard to the second, it is settled law that an additional corroboration is required connecting the accused individually with the actual commission of the offence. Prudence requires that the connexion of each individual with the crime should be proved and corroborated by independent evidence, the real point being that precautions must be taken against the possibility of substitution. A story may be meticulously true in every detail with the all important exception that the name of A has been inserted instead of the name of B. The correctness of the story is not affected by the all-important change. It is unsafe to convict a person on the uncorroborated testimony of an approver who is no better than the ordinary run of such men.

Held, on the evidence, that there was not sufficient corroboration of the approver's evidence in a case of conspiracy. (Harrison and Dalip Singh, JJ.) RANBIR SINGH v. EMPEROR. I R. 1932 Lah. 195 = 136 I C. 19 = 33 Cr L J. 242 = 33 P.L.R. 241 = 1932 Cr.C. 248 = A.I.R. 1932 Lah. 204.

There is no bar to the conviction of an accused person even on the uncorroborated testimony of an approver if the Court is fully satisfied about its truth. But the testimony of an approver being usually of a tainted character, the Courts as a matter of prudence insist generally on some material corroboration thereof in so far as it implicates the accused person. The extent of corroboration will however vary with the circumstances of each case. If the approver's evidence appears on the whole to be reliable and he has no motive for implicating an accused falsely, the corroboration required will be comparatively less. There is no rule of law in India which prevents a Court from convicting on the sole evidence of an approver, but, adopting the practice which has for many years been followed in England, no Court in this country will convict an accused person upon such evidence unless it is corroborated by some independent testimony. This salutary rule of practice is particularly necessary in cases of conspiracy to commit crimes where the crime of criminal conspiracy is established the moment an agreement between the accused persons to commit such crimes is proved. Evidence of a mere agreement can easily be concocted or manufactured, hence the need of independent testimony by way of corroboration is manifestly essential. The evidence of one approver cannot amount to corroboration of the evidence of another as the fact that a witness is an approver creates suspicion in the mind of the Court and that suspicion cannot be removed by merely calling another approver. It is no doubt not necessary that the evidence corroborating the story of an approver or an accomplice should be evidence with directly connects the accused with the offence. A revolver stolen in October was found with the accused in the following month of May.

Held, that though it was not possible to say that the distance of time between October and May was so short that a presumption of guilt should necessarily arise, yet as the accused was not able to account for the possession of an article not easily obtained in market overt without due caution, the Court was entitled to presume that the accused was either a thief or a retainer of stolen goods knowing them to be stolen. ———S. 114, Ill. (g)—Criminal trial — Prosecution omitting to summon witness—Inference.

Before the prosecution launches any case, they ought to be satisfied of the truth of the case which they are going to place before the Court. Consequently, it is absurd to expect the prosecution to call witnesses who will speak against that case. If the prosecution find that a number of those who are present will not support the prosecution case, they must make up their minds whether they are truthful witnesses or not. If they come to the conclusion that they are truthful witnesses, they ought to withdraw the prosecution forthwith. If, on the other hand, they come to the conclusion that they are not truthful witnesses, there is no obligation for the prosecution to call them. Practically speaking, therefore, the prosecution ought to call those witnesses, who, they think, will support the prosecution case and no others. If the witnesses who are prepared to speak against that case are respectable witnesses who ought to be believed, then the prosecution ought to withdraw the case. It is quite useless to pursue a case and then call a whole series of witnesses who are going to speak against it. On the other hand if the defence comes to the conclusion that the witnesses are witnesses of truth who ought to have been called, then it is the duty of the defence to call them. Hence simply because the prosecution does not call certain witnesses, the Court need not raise the presumption under S. 114, Ill. (g) when the absence of the witnesses is explained properly. ———S. 114. Ill. (g)—Presumption from withholding of evidence—Scope of.

Ill. (g), to S. 114 of the Evidence Act says that the Court may presume that evidence which could be and is not produced would, if produced, be unfavourable to the person who withholds it. The section does not, in all cases, make it obligatory on the Court to act on such a presumption, because a particular case may be such that notwithstanding that there is an intentional non-production, other circumstances may be present upon which such intentional non-production may be justifiable on some reasonable grounds or may be attributable to some justifiable cause. The illustration itself says that the Court shall also have regard to other facts in considering whether the maxim does or does not apply to any particular case. But where no other cause is apparent or proved, the Court will be entitled to rely on such presumption. (*Mukerji and S. K. The strength of the presumption which might be raised when the document creating obligation is produced by the obligor varies in different circumstances. As indicated by Ill. (i), when the document creating an obligation is in the hands of the obligor there is a presumption that the obligation has been discharged, if the contest is between the creditor and the debtor. But the presumption has much less force when raised between the debtor and the purchaser of the debt than when raised between the original creditor and the debtor. Where the land in dispute was one of the abadi sites in a malguzari village ordinarily given on licence to persons residing in the village, and the defendant openly built first a shed and then a house on a site to which the malguzar with full knowledge of his proceedings offered no objection, the defendant is justified in believing that the owner acquiesced in the building. Held, that though the document which conferred the power to adopt on the widow was declared by the Privy Council to be invalid as a will and so not properly registered, the widow was in the circumstances estopped from urging the invalidity of the adoption and recovering the properties from him. 34 All 398 (P.C.), Rel. on.

EVIDENCE ACT (1872), S. 115—Conduct.

The rule of estoppel is based on the doctrine that a person cannot both approbate and reprobate in respect of the same matter to the prejudice of another. To raise the bar of estoppel there are three essential conditions: (1) a representation, act or omission by the party against whom the bar is pleaded; (2) this must influence the conduct of the party affected thereby in such a way that the true or real position cannot be ascertained in spite of due diligence; (3) the position of the party affected must in consequence have been changed to his detriment in a manner which could not otherwise have happened. In the case of a purchase from or claim through a limited owner, the purchaser or person claiming must be deemed to be aware of the exact nature of the legal rights of the owner, quite apart from any act or omission on the part of others, and therefore the question of estoppel by conduct cannot possibly arise in such a case. There is no estoppel where the truth is accessible, and a party is not actually misled and has not been induced by the other party to do something which is detrimental to his interest. If the owner of a property clothes a third person with an apparent ownership of property and right of disposition thereof, he is estopped from asserting his title against a person to whom such third party has disposed of the property and who took it in good faith and for value. A, who died leaving him surviving a widow B, and an adopted son C, bequeathed certain premises along with other property to B. Later C falsely alleging that the premises had been assigned by A to him in consideration of a sum of money, got the assignment registered in the Land Registry. It was found by the Courts below that B had full knowledge of the false transaction and thus B was responsible for procuring the premises to be conveyed into the name of C as on sale to him by A and entries to that effect being made in the Land Registry. Subsequently C contrived to mortgage the premises with D for a big sum of money. C had previously made a statutory declaration which was entered in Land Registry that the title-deeds were lost. On default in payment of interest the mortgagee put the premises for sale by auction and they were purchased by one E. Later B obtained letters of administration with the will of A annexed thereto, in respect of A's estate and she issued a writ against E claiming as administratrix declaration that the premises were vested in her, the mortgage of D was null and void and E had no title to the premises purchased by him.

Held, that it was an ill-founded claim. B had authorized the creation of the deed of assignment to C and its entry in the Land Registry. The mortgagee D, from whom E derived his title, acted upon B's statement as B intended he should and advanced money on the faith of it. B was therefore estopped from asserting as against E that C was not the owner of the premises as a purchaser for value from A. Cross estoppel

The conduct of the plaintiffs in applying for execution of the decree in terms of the award was a clear indication by them that they accepted the award, and it was in consequence of that conduct that the defendants altered their position by delivering possession of the portion awarded to the plaintiffs which they would not otherwise have done and thus the plaintiffs have been affected by estoppel. The defendants were as much estopped by their conduct in not raising the plea in the Court below and in not asserting in that Court that plaintiff 1 could not execute the decree during the pendency of her appeal, and thus putting plaintiff 1 to her election.

Held, it was a case of cross estoppel and that estoppel against estoppel doth put the matter at large and that therefore it was not open to the defendant to plead that there was a waiver of the right of the plaintiff to challenge the decree by way of appeal. ———S. 115—Election—Principle stated—Voluntary act necessary—Deposit by mortgagor—Withdrawal by creditor of mortgagee despite mortgagee's protest—Right of mortgagee to deny validity of deposit.

The rule that where a person accepts a benefit under the order of a Court he is precluded from challenging the order is only a special phase of the rule that a party cannot, either in course of a litigation or in dealing in pais, occupy inconsistent positions: upon that rule election is founded. Where a man has an election between several inconsistent courses of action, he will be confined to that which he first adopts: the election, if made with the knowledge of facts, is in itself binding. But the election must be, however, a voluntary act, not forced upon him by circumstances over which he had no control and notwithstanding his protest. "Justice and equity require no more than that a party to an instrument should be precluded from contradicting it to the prejudice of another person, when that other person or the person through whom the other person claims has been induced to alter his position by virtue of the instrument but when the question arises between the parties or representative of the parties who at the time of the execution of the instrument were aware of its intention and object and who have not been induced to alter their position by its execution, justice would more surely be obtained by allowing any party whether he be plaintiff or defendant to show the truth" The above view in 1 All. 403 is in conformity with the general principle of estoppel as laid down in S. 115 and recitals in a deed do not form an exception to that rule. When the parties to the sale-deed knew full well that the property belonged to the joint family, the vendee though a party to the sale deed is not prevented from showing the real nature of the sale transaction, from denying the title of the vendor and pleading that the property really belonged to the joint Hindu family and that the sale was on behalf of joint family, though it was executed only by one of its members in whose name the property stood. Pleadings.

———S. 115—Pleadings—Estoppel as between defendants—Conditions.

In order to operate as estoppel under S. 115 three conditions must be fulfilled: (1) there must be a representation made by the opposite party with a view to cause belief; (2) the representation should have been believed under circumstances that its falsity could not be ascertained in spite of due diligence; and (3) actions arising out of such belief. There can be no estoppel where truth is accessible. Again there can be no estoppel in the absence of representation or conduct amounting to such. So also, there can be no estoppel where a party is not misled and has not been induced to do something detrimental to his interest owing to the actions of the other party. A pleading by two sets of defendants against the suit of another person to defeat his claim does not amount to an estoppel as between them. 13 M.I.A. 551 (P.C.), Foll. and 1 All. 403, Ref. The mere fact that a co-pre-emptor is found to have acquiesced in a sale before the pre-emption suit, and is consequently estopped from pre-empting, does not disqualify the other pre-emptor, who has not acquiesced in the same way. Silence.

———S. 115— Silence—Auction sale — Mortgagee present—No mention of his mortgage—Estoppel.

Mere silence cannot operate as an estoppel against a person unless there is a duty cast upon him to disabuse another person of some error or misapprehension, under which he is acting. It is a well known principle of law that at an auction-sale, the auction purchaser purchases only the right, title and interest of the judgment-debtor. If a person, who is not a party to the decree and at the time of the auction-sale has an outstanding title in himself in the shape of a prior mortgage, it is not his duty to proclaim from the house tops, while the auction-sale is going on, so as to warn the intending bidders that he holds a mortgage over the property. It is the duty of the decree-holder and perhaps to a certain extent of the judgment debtor to see that the sale proclamation contains the necessary particulars given in O. 21, R. 66, C. P. Code. If there is an omission and a mortgage charge is omitted, then the mere fact that the holder of that mortgage was present at the time of the auction sale would not debar him afterwards from maintaining an action on his mortgage, as there is no duty cast upon him to speak and make mention of his mortgagee. ———S. 115—Waiver—Conduct—Plaintiff executing decree and also filing appeal—No waiver of the right to challenge the decree by way of appeal—Na estoppel.

To attract the applicability of the plea of estoppel in pais, two conditions must be fulfilled. In the first place, the representation, whether by words spoken or written or by conduct upon which the estoppel is founded, must be clear and unambiguous. And in the next place, there must be proof that such representation was acted on by the person to whom it was made. The defendants had admitted the right of plaintiff 1 to maintenance, and had consented to maintenance being allowed to her pending the suit. The plaintiffs were claiming a higher right than that admitted by the defendants. During the pendency of the suit, by the consent of parties, an order was passed that defendant should pay plaintiff 1 certain amount every month by way of maintenance. The defence set up was found to be true and a decree for maintenance was passed. Plaintiff 1 applied for execution of the order for maintenance passed by the trial Court and also appealed from the decree. The defendants contended that she was estopped from filing the appeal.

Held, that if plaintiff 1 sought execution of the decree of the trial Court, her act in doing so was in no sense productive of any change in the situation of the defendants. Moreover the execution application which was granted was the third application; and it recited the fact of appeal in express terms; that under the circumstances instead of the conduct of the plaintiff being an act amounting to a waiver of the right of the plaintiffs to challenge the decree by way of appeal, there was clear notice to the defendants that execution was being sought pending appeal and subject to what the appellate Court ———S. 115—Waiver—Distinction between waiver and estoppel.

Estoppel and waiver are entirely different. There is no such thing as estoppel by waiver. Estoppel is not a cause of action. It may (if established) assist a plaintiff in enforcing a cause of action by preventing a defendant from denying the existence of some fact essential to establish the cause of action; or in other words, by preventing a defendant from asserting the existence of some fact the existence of which would destory the cause of action. Estoppel is a rule of evidence. A statement or representation, to ground an estoppel, must be clear and unambiguous. Waiver on the other hand is contractual and may constitute a cause of action; it is an agreement to release or not to assert a right. ———S. 116—Applicability—Tenant not put into possession—Denial of title—Surrender of possession prior to—Necessity.

For the application of the principle of estoppel contained in S. 116, Evidence Act, it is not necessary that the tenant should have been put actually into possession by the landlord. It is sufficient if, being already in possession, he passes a rent note to the landlord acknowledging that a new tenancy has arisen. Once the relation is established, the tenant is estopped; and before he can deny the title of the landlord, he must first openly surrender possession to the landlord. When a party executes a kabuliyat and obtains possession thereunder of certain lands, he is estopped from denying the title or seisin of his grantor by pleading that he is only a benamidar for another. ———S. 116—Construction—"At the beginning of the tenancy"—Meaning of.

The words, "at the beginning of the tenancy," in S. 116 of the Evidence Act ought not to be construed in a limited way; the words mean the time when the tenant was let into possession. A new tenancy may begin though the tenant has been in possession prior to that. It may begin by the grant of a lease by the landlord or by the tenant attorning to a new landlord. The distinction between a case in which the tenant is let into possession by the person whose title he seeks to deny and that in which the person whose title he denies did not let him into possession is that in the former the estoppel is complete, that is, the tenant cannot deny the landlord's title so long as the tenancy continues, while in the latter, the estoppel is not complete in the sense that the tenant may evade it by showing circumstances which would vitiate the agreement between him and his landlord. It is not an exception to the rule in S. 116, but is only an application of the ordinary principles of law which are in no way affected by the section. Estoppel exists in both clauses of cases ; but in the second class the tenant has necessarily to show, in order to escape the estoppel, that he executed the lease under misrepresentation, coercion or fraud which would vitiate the contract. The rule of law is firmly established that a tenant who has been let into possession cannot deny his landlord's title however defective it may be so long as he has not openly restored possession by the surrender to his landlord. The same principle applies between a lessee and sub-lessee. No tenant can set up jus tertii in a third person in answer to a suit by the person, who let him into possession. But where the true owner ejects the tenant from the possession of the land, the tenancy ceases and after eviction, the tenant can attorn to the true owner and set up his title in answer to a suit by the landlord who let him into possession. 37 All. 557

——S. 116—Scope—Assignee of tenant — Estoppel against.

S. 116 which enacts the rule of estoppel of a tenant is not exhaustive of all principles of estoppel as between landlord and tenant. The basis of the principle is the fact of the letting of the tenant into possession which creates the estoppel. If a tenant consents to give up possession to a party claiming title adverse to the landlord's title, that party is estopped at the tenant would have been from disputing the landlord's title. ——S. 116—Scope—Landlord and tenant—Denial of title—Estoppel—Basis of doctrine.

S. 116 of the Evidence Act deals with instances of estoppel by agreement based on permissive enjoyment,

EVIDENCE ACT (1872), S. 116.

The estoppel of a tenant is founded upon a contract between him and his landlord. The section rests on the principle that a tenant who has been let into possession cannot deny his landlord's title, however defective it may be, so long as he has not openly restored possession by surrender to his landlord. ———S. 116—Scope—Person already in possession continuing in such possession by executing lease—Plea of "jus tertii".

The question as to whether the words "at the beginning of the tenancy" occurring in S. 116 refer to the commencement of the particular lease or contract between the tenant and the landlord or whether they refer to the beginning of the occupation of land by the tenant or by the person through whom he claims is not free from doubt, but the better view is to hold that the section relates also to tenancies other than those in which the tenant was first let into possession. The principle is the same whether a man was let into possession or whether he has continued in such possession by specific agreement between himself and his landlord. Therefore, a person who has been in possession before the execution of a lease by him, is bound by that lease and is estopped from challenging the title of his landlord unless he can prove that he executed the lease under any fraud, misrepresentation or mistake, nor can he set up any "jus tertii," in favour of a third person, until and unless he gives up his tenancy (Nanavutty, J.) RAMZANI v. BANSIDHAR. 154 I.C. 1029 = 7 R O. 538 = 1935 R.D. 202 = 1935 O.W.N 449 = A I.R. 1935 Oudh 385.

———S. 116—Tenant—Denial of landlord's title—Permissibility.

Where the tenant is evicted by a person having a title paramount and entitled to immediate possession or under threat of eviction by such a person, the tenant attorns to the claimant, the tenant is not precluded from denying the landlord's title. But where the tenant, on finding that a rival claimant was successful in certain proceedings relating to other properties, attorned to him voluntarily, the general rule applies and the tenant is estopped from denying the landlord's title. Held, the defendant was estopped from denying the plaintiff's title without surrendering possession. (Mukerji and R.C. Mitter, JJ.) KONAULLA v. BEPIN CHANDRA GUPTA. 62 C.L J. 205.

———S. 116—Termination of tenancy—Applicability of rule of estoppel.

While under S. 116 of the Evidence Act a tenant during the continuance of the tenancy is estopped from denying that at the beginning of the tenancy, his landlord had any title to the demised premises, it is open to a tenant in a suit for recovery of rent to show that the title of his landlord has expired or been legally determined. Thus where an ouster by title paramount or an attornment thereto is alleged it is not the title of the landlord at the beginning of the tenancy which is being impeached by the raising of such a defence and that rule of estoppel laid down in S. 116 no longer operates as a bar, Such a defence is permissible without a tenant having to surrender possession as is ordinarily necessary before the lessee can deny the lessor's title. A decree in ejectment passed against a lessee at the instance of a lessor is not only binding upon the lessee but also upon his sub-tenants, provided they have no rights independent of the right of their lessor in the demised premises. An under tenant is bound by the estoppel against his lessor under S. 116. Before the plaintiffs purchased the suit land, they made a verbal arrangement with the defendants according to which the latter were to become tenants for the period 1328 to 1334 at an annual rent. The defendants did not pay the rent but remained in possession and when sued, they contended that the verbal lease was invalid by reason of S. 107 of the T. P. Act and S. 17 of the Registration Act.

Held, that the defendants were estopped by their conduct from denying the relationship of landlord and tenant. A verbal lease for more than one year accompanied by delivery of possession is valid for the first year and as the defendants continued in possession they were tenants holding over within the meaning of S. 116, T. ——S 123—State and official documents—Scope of privilege—Powers of Court—South Australian Rules, O. 32, R. 14 (2).

The privilege in respect of official and state documents from production in Court is a narrow one, most sparingly to be exercised. It is not confined to public official documents of a political or administrative character, but its foundation being that the information cannot be disclosed without injury to the public interests, it cannot be applied further than the attainment of that object may require. The privilege, therefore, cannot be asserted in relation of documents the contents of which have already been published. The circumstance that the documents are confidential or official is alone no reason for their non-production. Nor is the fact that the production of documents might in a particular litigation prejudice the case of the Crown or assist that of the other side any overriding reason for their non-production. The Court has always in reserve the power to call for the production, and to enquire into the nature of the documents for which the privilege is claimed and to require some indication of the nature of the injury to the State which would follow their production. The Court is also entitled to prescribe in any particular case the manner in which the claim for privilege shall be made if the claim is to be allowed. It may, if so advised, be content with the unsworn statement of a responsible Minister; it may accept a formal affidavit from him or, if necessary call for an affidavit sufficiently full and indicative of that his mind has been brought to bear on the question of the expediency in the public interest of giving or refusing the information asked for. In a proper case, the Court has also the power, notwithstanding a certificate from a Minister of State claiming protection, to inspect the documents for which the privilege is set up in order to see whether the claim is justified, provided, of course, that such power be exercised so as not to destroy the protection of the privilege in any case in which it is found to exist. Their Lordships considered it an appropriate case for the Court to exercise his power of inspection where the documents for which the privilege was claimed came into existence with reference to the commercial and contractual activities of the State and were the documents of a Department which had since been disbanded.

——S. 132—"Compelled to answer question."

The compulsion referred to in S. 132 of the Evidence Act is something more than being put in the witness box, and being sworn to give evidence, but such compulsion may be express or implied. It is difficult to draw a distinction between compulsion express and implied. In every case compulsion is express although it may be couched in different words, and may give intimation to the witness that he is bound to answer not only the question which he has objected to but every other question which may on a particular point be put to him. An intimation of that nature might relieve the witness of objecting to every question which is put to him and which exposes him to an action, but before he can be said to have been compelled to answer a question, he must object to answer such question, or at any rate, the very first question on the same point so as to invite the attention of the Court to apply its mind to the question and decide whether he is to be compelled to answer the same or not. Hence where there was no averment much less proof that the applicant made any protest express or implied or that he was compelled to answer by the Court expressly or impliedly except the fact that he was put on his oath and put certain question to which he answered,

In a jury trial, it is the duty of the Judge to point out to the jury the position in law affecting the evidence of accomplice and to tell them that they may convict, if they choose on his evidence alone; but that owing to the circumstances in which the evidence is given, it is, generally speaking, very dangerous to act upon it unless they find corroborative evidence which implicates the accused person. If such a warning has been given and nevertheless the jury choose to convict the accused in the absence of such corroborative evidence, the conviction will not generally be quashed. In a case where a Judge is sitting without a jury, he must apply the same rule by treating himself as a jury. If, therefore, those factors are not present to his mind, and if there is not sufficient corroborative evidence implicating the accused, then the conviction ought to be set aside. It cannot be laid down that in no circumstances can the evidence of one accomplice be regarded as corroborating another accomplice. There is no law that the evidence of an accomplice cannot be used as the basis of a conviction; but there is a very wise practical rule that the evidence of an accomplice should not be accepted as sufficient unless it is corroborated. That is a practical rule of common sense. But it does not follow from this that, when there are a large number of accomplices giving evidence independently, the fact that they support each other adds nothing to the strength of their testimony. The testimony of an approver requires corroboration in material particulars both in the matter of the circumstances of the crime and also in the matter of the identification of the accused with the crime The corroboration must be independent of the accomplice; the evidence of one accomplice cannot corroborate that of another; the evidence of either requires corroboration before it can be acted upon. But a person who happens to be cognizant of a crime or who makes no attempt to prevent it, or who does not disclose its commission is not an accomplice; it leads to confusions of thought to treat him as practically an accomplice. There is no warrant in law to justify the proposition that the evidence of such a person should only be relied on to the same extent as that of an accomplice. The real question in such a case is the degree of credit to be attached to his testimony and that depends on all the facts and circumstances of the particular case. Corroborative evidence should be taken by the Court in case of the evidence of an accomplice, though legally no such corroboration is necessary. It must be evidence which implicates the accused, that is, which confirms in some material particular not only the evidence that the crime has been committed, but also that the accused committed it. The nature of corroboration necessarily varies according to the particular circumstances of the offence charged. The corroboration need not be such as to confirm the accomplice in every detail of the crime, nor need it be by direct evidence that the accused committed the crime. It is sufficient if it is merely circumstantial evidence of his connexion with the crime. (1916) 2 K. B. 658, Foll. It is a rule of general practice resting on wide human experience that an accomplice as particeps criminis is an immoral person and his testimony is generally tainted. When he gives evidence under a promise of pardon, he may naturally be expected to favour the prosecution. The effect of S. 133 is that in very exceptional cases if the Court is satisfied that the presumption of the untrustworthiness attaching to accomplices in general is rebutted by special circumstances, the Court can accept the uncorroborated testimony of the accomplice. But the established practice of all the Courts in England as well as in India is ordinarily to require corroboration of the evidence of an accomplice in regard to material particulars. ———S. 134—Offence under S. 193, I. P. Code—Proof—More than single witness, if necessary.

The English Common Law rule that the testimony of a single witness is not sufficient to sustain an indictment for perjury is not a safe guide for the Indian Courts which are bound by the statute law. Under S. 134 of the Evidence Act, no particular number of witnesses is required in any case for the proof of any fact. This rule applies to a prosecution for an offence under S. 193, I. P. Code. ———S. 134—Scope—Conviction based solely on evidence of complainant—Validity of.

It is not correct to say that in no case should a conviction be given on the strength of the testimony of a single witness. It is the function of a Judge to arrive at a decision in civil or criminal cases, by weighing evidence and not by counting the number of witnesses examined by a party. It is the quality and not the quantity of the evidence that ought to influence the decision of a case and it is upon this fundamental maxim that S. 134 of the Evidence Act is based. It follows therefore that the testimony of a single witness, if believed, is sufficient to prove or disprove any fact and there is nothing in law to fetter the discretion of the Judge in this respect. Each case has to be judged according to its own peculiar circumstances and a conviction upon the statement of the complainant alone cannot be said to be illegal. (*Mahadevayya, O. C. Further it is impossible to expect direct evidence that a witness has been won over, but where he makes a statement in favour of the accused directly contrary to a previous statement against the accused, it may be reasonably inferred that he has been won over and it is desirable that his veracity should be tested by cross-examination. ———Ss 154 and 155—Hostile witness—Cross-examination by party summoning witness—Permission of Court, if necessary.

Before a party calling a witness can cross examine him, it is not necessary that the witness should first of all be declared hostile. In this respect S. 154 of the Indian Evidence Act gives an unqualified discretion to the Judge quite apart from any question of the hostility or otherwise of the witness. It is, however, necessary before the procedure of S. 154 can be adopted, either for permission of the Court to be obtained or for it to be given by the Court without its being sought. Such permission should be signified, if not in words, by some other action of the Court indicating its permission during the cross-examination of the witness by the party calling him. ———S. 154—Hostile witness—Discretion of Court.

The discretion allowed by S. 154, Evidence Act, should not be exercised without sufficient reason, and the reason should be stated; because, by offering a witness, a party is held to recommend him as worthy of credence, and so it is not in general open to him to test the witness's credit or impeach his truthfulness. ———S. 154—Hostile witness—Permission to cross-examine—Principles governing.

The circumstances in which a witness may be cross-examined by the party calling him are not laid down in S. 154, which leaves the matter entirely to the discretion of the Court. The mischief begins when the grant of permission itself is considered to be equivalent to an adjudication or to an expression of opinion by the Court adverse to the veracity of the witness, instead of being treated merely as a permission to test the veracity of a witness, a permission which can hardly be refused when any witness called by the prosecution makes an unexpected statement adverse to the case of the prosecution. Where the lower Court relied on certain statements which were inadmissible in evidence under S. 162, Cr. P. Code, but there was a large volume of other evidence supporting the conviction.

Held, that the admission of the evidence and the reference to it in the learned Judge's charge are not facts which, in view of S. 167 of the Evidence Act, would justify the High Court in interfering with the decision, in view of the fact that the Judge's charge apart from this flaw was a fair one. Where notice has been issued for enhancement at the time of admission of the appeal by the accused, the appellant is entitled on the evidence to show that he is innocent. If the conviction is not correct on the evidence, the appellant will be entitled to an acquittal. If, on the other hand, the evidence is sufficient for conviction it is not necessary for the Court to send the case for re trial even though there may be misdirection or admission of irrelevant evidence as the Court can accept the verdict of the jury under S. 167, Evidence Act, unless the Court is of opinion that it is difficult to arrive at any conclusion on the evidence and that it is necessary or desirable that a re-trial should be ordered. A case of an agreement anterior to the passing of a decree could not be allowed to be set up in a proceeding for execution of a decree; but there cannot be any bar to a party asking for relief by way of an injunction to restrain the decree holder from putting in execution the decree, if the decree-holders committed by breach of their obligation under an anterior agreement. Ordinarily in the case of a decree against an agriculturist, resort should not be had to a mortgage for the purpose of satisfying the decree if other means or remedies are available, for instance, possession of movable property or a temporary alienation where such a measure would be sufficient to satisfy the decree. ———Application for—Omission to state names of persons interested in decree—Procedure.

It is nowhere laid down that the omission on the part of a decree-holder to state in his application the names of all the persons who are interested in the decree is such a defect as would invalidate execution proceedings. One of the prayers contained in the execution application was that if the decree holder was allowed a proportionate share in the sale proceeds under S. 73, the application may be allowed to subsist for the realization of the balance of the decretal amount The order of Subordinate Judge passed on this application opened with the sentence "the request of the decree-holder is to be granted." The operative part of the order ran as follows : The case be filed at present as the decree has already been sent to the Deputy Commissioner, Sitapur, for rateable distribution . . . . . The decree-holder will legally have no right to present another application for execution."

Held, that the Court had no power to order equitable execution against the property because that would be frustrating the order for maintenance, which was exempt from attachment under S. 60.

———Executability of decree—Compromise decree—Agreement by defendant to pay rent every month—Decree in terms.

The question whether a decree is executable has to be settled primarily upon the form or language of the decree itself. The test to ascertain whether a decree is executable is whether there is a direct and definite order to a definite person to do or to refrain from doing a definite thing. When the decree contains directions to certain persons to pay certain amounts of money on certain dates, it cannot be contended that it is unexecutable. In a suit for possession of godowns with past and future mesne profits, there was a compromise under which it was agreed that the plaintiff was not to get possession, but that the defendants should acknowledge him as landlord and pay the arrears and future ground-rent at certain rates every month in perpetuity, and a decree was passed in terms of the compromise petition.

Held, that it was not beyond the competence of the Court to pass a decree in such terms; that it was not merely a declaratory decree; and that the decree was indisputably executable in form. ———Executability of decree—Decree executable or only declaratory—Test.

The test to see whether a decree is an executable one or is merely declaratory is whether there is a direct order against any one or whether the decree merely declares rights and obligations on the part of any one. After sale of attached property, the judgment debtor preferred objection that the decree was void and could not be executed. Parties had referred their dispute to arbitration out of Court. An award was delivered in pursuance thereof which effected mortgage of judgment-debtor's property of one house for Rs. 3,000 to be paid by the mortgagee-decree holder; the mortgage was to be with possession for a period of a year and a half to be counted from the date of the award. Arrangement as regards repayment of mortgage-money was also laid down. The award was filed and a decree was passed in corporating the terms of the award. Mortgagee decree-holder took out execution of this decree and prayed for recovery of his mortgage-money with certain item due for rent by sale of the mortgaged property.

Held, that the decree was merely declaratory of the rights and obligations of the parties and was not capable of enforcement in execution proceedings. A.I.R. 1930

The only limitation imposed on the decree-holders was the one under the law prescribing the time within which the decree must be put into execution. A suit for a permanent injunction was dismissed but the Court modified the decree as follows: "It is declared that the plaintiff's gumasthas are entitled to prepare and should be allowed opportunity of preparing independent accounts which the defendant's gumasthas should countersign if correct."

Held, that the decree embodies a direction though the word 'injunction' is not used. It is more than a mere declaration; it imposes a duty one that can be enforced on the defendant's gumasthas to countersign the accounts in a certain event and is executable and the plaintiff's only remedy is to apply under O. 21, R. 32, C. This was done and it was accepted by all parties. Pending these proceedings, one of the defendants died and a dispute arose among them as to the proportion in which the deceased's share was to be divided. Then a deed of settlement was drawn up to which all the members alive were parties and which dealt with not only the share of the deceased member but also all other matters outstanding between them. After this a final decree for partition was passed. Subsequently the decree in the partition suit was sought to be executed.

Held, that there was nothing to be executed and that it must be deemed to have been satisfied. (Courtney-Terrell, C. J. and Saunders, J.) GOPI NATH v. GOPAI JI. 147 I C. 389 = 6 R.P. 352 = A.I.R. 1933 Pat. 625 (2).

A decree provided that the defendant should pay the decretal amount "in three years from to-day." The decree-holder applied for execution about a year after the date of the decree. The judgment-debtor pleaded that the execution was premature and was an attempt to practise fraud upon the Court, and made mala fide to annoy the judgment-debtor and to bring pressure on him. The executing Court disposed of the case summarily without giving the judgment debtor any opportunity to prove his allegations:

Per Reilly, J.—The question whether the executing Court can grant interest on mesne profits depends on the intention of the decree, which if the decree is not expressed clearly, should be ascertained by interpretation. Even if the decree is "silent as to interest" in the sense that the word "interest" does not appear in it, nevertheless, if by the use of the expression "mesne profits" combined with a reference to a rate of income or in any other way, the decree indicates that interest is originally due shall become recoverable, the executing Court has the power to go behind the decree and give the same equitable relief that the Court enforcing the agreement embodied in the compromise decree could give. The question whether a default has or has not taken place is one of fact to be decided on the facts of each case. Similarly it depends on the facts, if time was of the essence of the contract. As a result of the default, the judgment-debtor has to pay a larger amount but where the decree-holder is merely withdrawing a concession and the amount claimed by him does not exceed what was due to him there is no equitable ground for treating the sum as a penalty and refusing to enforce its payment. A suit which under the Agra Tenancy Act was cognizable by the Revenue Court alone was filed in the Court of the Munsif. An objection was taken that the suit was not cognizable by the Civil Court but it was disallowed and the claim was decreed. No appeal was preferred to the District Judge nor was any further remedy sought from the High Court. Held, it would be contrary to the spirit of the provisions in S. 47, C. A Court executing a mortgage decree will not in execution department enter into the complicated question as regards the nature of the title of the mortgagor. It will look into the mortgage decree and if it finds that the property sought to be sold is specified therein, then its plain duty will be to execute the decree leaving the parties to have their rights determined separately by institution of a separate suit. It is well settled that a Court which passes a mortgage decree may in certain circumstances and having regard to the equities of the case, prescribe the order in which the mortgaged properties are to be sold. It is also true that an executing Court may in certain exceptional cases, where equities demand it, prescribe the order in which the mortgaged properties are to be sold. But once the Court passing the mortgage decree has definitely laid down the order in which the mortgaged properties are to be sold, the executing Court cannot ignore the original decree and proceed to sell the properties in a different order, in spite of the objections of decree-holder as well as some of the judgment debtors. No doubt when a decree is ambiguous, reference to the pleadings is permissible, but the executing Court is to take the decree as it stands. ———Executing Court—Powers of—Power to go behind decree—Final decree in mortgage suit passed on application made beyond limitation—If nullity—Power of execution Court to refuse execution.

An executing Court can only question such decrees as have been made without jurisdiction. An order made in erroneous exercise of jurisdiction is not the same thing as one made without jurisdiction. The former is only voidable but the latter is void When a Court is seized as a mortgage suit, it can pass orders on an application for final decree even though such application has been made beyond three years from the date of the preliminary decree. The mere fact that it overlooks the bar of limitation or acts wrongly in not applying it will not make the final decree without jurisdiction. Limitation is only a question of procedure and not one of jurisdiction, and a wrong decision, whether express or implied, on a question of limitation does not oust the jurisdiction of the Court. The final decree passed by the Court in such a case is not a nullity ; and the executing Court cannot refuse to execute it on that ground. ———Executing Court—Powers of—Validity of decree—Want of jurisdiction and erroneous exercise of it—Distinction.

An executing Court cannot question the decree sought to be executed except on the score of patent want of jurisdiction but want of jurisdiction is a very different matter from the erroneous exercise of it. So where the Court recorded a compromise decree under O. 23, R. 3 and though a term of the compromise related to property not in question in the suit, yet as it was the consideration of the compromise and so intimately connected with it, the Court had jurisdiction to record the compromise, and the executing Court has no power to question the validity of the decree. 53 C. 166 (F.B.), Ref. If the Court had no power to pass the decree, the matter should have been raised either by way of review or by way of appeal, but the executing Court cannot go behind it. EXECUTION—Executing Court.

An executing Court can within certain limits question the validity of a decree, where the question of jurisdiction is principally involved. The provisions of R. 3 of O. 32 as to the appointment of a guardian ad litem for a minor defendant, are imperative and if a minor is sued without a guardian ad litem and a decree is passed against him, that decree is a nullity and cannot be enforced against him, and the minor can question the validity of the decree, on the ground of his non representation, in the execution proceedings. This dismissal of appeal preferred by the minor against such decree cannot have the effect of validating the decree against him. (Grille, J.C. and Sahdeb, A.J.C.) RADHAKISAN v. BHAGWANDAS. 159 I.C. 951=8 R.N. 150=31 N L R. 403=A.I.R. 1935 Nag. 235.

———Executing Court—Powers of—Variance of decree.

An executing Court must execute, the decree if valid and executable, and cannot alter or vary it in execution. But an executing Court, which refuses to sell property, the sale of which has been decreed under O. 34 does not merely interpret the decree but interferes with it. ———Executing Court—Powers of—Variance of decree—Addition to decree—Permissibility.

The Court executing the decree can only construe the decree on what appears on the face of it and on the pleadings and documents filed in the case. Where therefore a decree is passed in respect of a certain survey number, the decree-holder cannot, in execution proceedings, apply that another survey number should also be sold along with the one mentioned in the decree, on the ground that being a woman she did not at the time of suit know the exact numbers of the property mortgaged to her, which had been described by mere boundaries, in the mortgage on which the decree was based. ———Executing Court—Powers of—Variance of decree compromise—Fixing new dates for payment.

An execution Court has no power to alter or vary the decree under execution and to substitute a new decree for it. A mere consent of parties cannot confer such a jurisdiction on the executing Court. Where the compromise arrived at between decree holder and judgment-debtor fixes new dates of payment or delivery of property, it alters the time of satisfaction and therefore varies the decree. It is not a mere case of postponement of execution, which the Court under special circumstances recognized by the Code of Civil Procedure can order. It is in effect the substitution of a new decree in place of the old decree, which new decree will itself become capable of execution. It is the duty of the execution Court not to entertain any application for the payment of the amount of the decree by instalment, if made after the expiry of the period prescribed by Art. 175, Limitation Act, even though the decree-holder is agreeable to it. The legislature has not intended that the Court has always an inherent power to accept a compromise whereby the parties have agreed that the decretal amount should be paid in instalments. Where a decree is payable in instalments and on default of any one instalment, the decree holder is entitled to execute decree for the whole amount, the question whether circumstances alleged by a party from which the Court is asked to infer a waiver, exist or not, is a question of fact, but whether from the facts, if proved, waiver can be inferred, is a question of law. A decree was payable in instalments and on default, the decree-holder was entitled to execute the decree for the whole amount. He applied for execution of the whole amount on default of the first instalment but pending execution received the amounts due for the first and second instalments.

A suit was instituted by the appellants in 1911 in the Court of the Subordinate Judge at M, who at that time sat at P, for possession of certain lands situated in the subdivision of D and for mesne profits The suit was decreed but an appeal by the respondents to the High Court was successful and the judgment of the High Court was affirmed by the Privy Council. The suit was accordingly dismissed with costs. In 1931, the respondents, the present decree-holders, applied for execution in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of M sitting at P and sought to sell in execution lands situated in subdivision of P. By a notification in 1917, a Subordinate Judge's Court at D in the District of M was established and the local limits of the executive subdivision of D were fixed as the local limits for his jurisdiction. Further it declared that the local limits of the executive subdivision of D ceased to be included in the local limits of the Subordinate Judge of P with effect from 31st October, 1917.

Held, that the effect of the notification issued under the Bengal, Agra and Assam Civil Courts Act (XII of 1887) was not to transfer the jurisdiction of the Court sitting at P to the Court sitting at D, but to divide between two individuals the jurisdiction of the Subordinate Judge in the District of M, and in this case the suit was begun in the Court of the Subordinate Judge at M, and that the mere fact that, for administrative purposes the Court of the Subordinate Judge was now divided between the Subordinate Judge and an Additional Subordinate Judge, and that a certain class of business or an area has been allotted to the Additional Subordinate Judge, did not make the Court of the Subordinate Judge sitting at P any the less the Court of the Subordinate Judge of M, nor did it prevent it from executing the decree. 42 M. 821 and 35 C. The mortgage was found to be for family necessity and a decree was passed. In execution, the sons contended that their share in the allowance could not be proceeded against and secondly that the security was not saleable.

Although the Court should not entertain an application for payment of the decretal money by instalment under O. 20, R. 11, if made after the expiry of six months from the date of decree, the order if actually passed on such a time-barred application is not a nullity. Just as a decree passed in a suit which is time-barred is binding on the parties, so an order for payment by instalment is binding on the judgment-debtor. In execution proceedings the Court will look at the substance of the transaction, and will not be disposed to set aside an execution upon mere technical grounds when they find that it is substantially right. 6 I.A 233 (P.C.), Appl. Held, that it did not make any difference whether the buildings set out in the application for sale were themselves part of the property originally mortgaged or whether the wooden house was demolished and the buildings set out in the application for sale, were built after the creation of the mortgage, because in either case, the applicant was entitled to have the buildings, mentioned in the application for sale, sold under the decree. ———Rent decree—Execution petition for sale of tenure —Decree holder, if bound to describe tenure after description in particular record-of-rights—Power of executing Court to order insertion of description or to dismiss petition for failure to do so.

There is no law which makes it incumbent upon the decree holder to describe in his execution petition the nature of the tenure sought to be sold or to describe it necessarily according to the record of-rights. The record-of-rights is no doubt presumed to be correct. But an executing Court cannot force a landlord decree-holder to accept the record-of-rights on pain of having his execution petition dismissed and thereby of losing his right to realize the rent. The question of the status of a particular tenure is not for the rent Court to decide. It is one to be decided by a Civil Court in a properly framed suit. The only object of describing the nature of the tenure is to give information to intending purchasers. For that purpose it is enough if the sale proclamation mentions the two entries (when there are two conflicting entries) or if it mentions that the tenure is of one description according to the decree holder and of another according to the judgment-debtor, leaving it to the future purchaser to have the matter settled in the Civil Court one way or another. It is not necessary or proper for the executing Court to go further. It has no power to order the decree-holder to amend his petition by inserting a description given in a former description and to dismiss the petition on his failure to do so. A Court executing a rent decree has no jurisdiction to refuse execution of the decree against the property of the judgment-debtor other than the tenure in arrears or to direct that the decree-holder must proceed in the first instance against the tenure in arrears. It is well established that an application for execution of a decree may be treated as one, in continuation or for revival of a previous application for execution, similar in scope and character, the consideration of which had been interrupted by objections and claims subsequently proved to be groundless or had been suspended by reason of an injunction or like obstruction. A mortgage debt belonging to a Mahomedan mother and her minor daughter was fraudulently assigned by the mother to C, without any benefit or necessity. C sued to recover the debt, making the mother and daughter parties thereto. The mother was appointed guardian ad litem of the minor but both remained ex parte at the trial. C obtained a decree and, in execution, the property was purchased by D. The minor brought the present suit for recovery of her share of the mortgage money by the sale of the hypotheca in the possession of D.

Held, that D was a bona fide third party purchaser who was not bound to enquire into the title of C or the validity of the assignment in his favour, inasmuch as both the mother and minor were parties to the suit; that the mere fact that the mother has executed an assignment of the minor's interests also could not be treated as sufficient for holding that the interests of the mother were adverse to that of the minor and D would have been perfectly justified in believing that the question if the mother's interest was adverse to that of the minor would have been considered by the Court, when it appointed the mother as the guardian ad litem of the minor and that the appointment was made in a regular and proper way; that, in any event, the minor having been a party to the suit was precluded from questioning the validity of the sale. The decree was voidable at the instance of the minor and as there was no specific prayer in the present suit to set it aside, the sale could not be impeached (Sundaram Chetty, J.) KANNUSAMI CHETTI v. RAHIMAT AMMAL. 147 I C 83=6 R M 314 38 L.W. 539 - A I.R. 1933 Mad. 806 - 65 M L. ———Sale—Setting aside—Material irregularity—Order for sale—Receiver appointed by same Court in respect of same property in another suit—Receiver aware of above order, applying for adjournment so that he may pay decree debt—Subsequent sale—Validity—Omission to get leave of Court—If fatal.

A sale of certain property was ordered in execution of a decree. The same Court in another suit appointed the receiver over the properties which were being brought to sale in pursuance of the orders of the Court. After his appointment, the receiver put in an application to the same Court for permission to pay Rs. 1,000 towards the decree debt In this application, he described himself as the receiver and he asked that the sale might be stayed for the purpose of enabling him to make that payment towards the decree debt. That application was granted and there was subsequently an adjournment of the sale for one week. The sale then took place and after it applications were made by the judgment-debtor and the receiver to have the sale set aside upon the grounds that previous leave of the Court for the sale had not been obtained as it should have been in view of the fact that a receiver had been appointed and, secondly, that the receiver was not made a party to the sale proceedings.

Held, that knowing him to be the receiver, having ordered the sale and having allowed the sale to go on, subject of course only to a short adjournment, it could not be said that the executing Court was unaware of the appointment of the receiver and in ignorance allowed the sale to go on. With full knowledge of the facts, the executing Court allowed the sale to go on. It was thus quite unnecessary for any formal application to be made to that Court for leave for the execution to proceed. Nor can the receiver be heard to say under these circumstances that he should have been joined as a party to the execution proceedings. He was fully aware of the sale. All he asked for was an adjournment for a short time for a certain purpose. He never objected to the sale going on without his being made a party and never asked to be made a party and hence the sale should not be set aside on these grounds. (*Beasley, C. Held, that as execution was sought without leave of Court in respect of property which had already vested in the Official Receiver, and as leave was necessary under S. 28 (2) of the Provincial Insolvency Act, the proceedings were invalid as against the Official Receiver, in so far as he represented the estate of the insolvent, but that otherwise they were valid. 25 Mad 406 and Wood v. Surr, 19 Beav. 551, Ref.; 54 C. 595 (P.C.), Dist. EXTRADITION—When allowed—Offences for which it can be demanded.

The policy of extradition law is to secure offenders guilty of only grave crimes and not purely local crimes or slight offences. The act complained of must be a "crime" according to the criminal law of both countries; and no person should be extradited whose deed is not a crime according to the criminal law of the State which is asked to extradite as well as of the State which demands extradition. ——S. 7—Scope—Warrant in disregard of—Legality—High Court's power to quash proceedings.

Before a Political Agent in a Native State can legally issue a warrant under S. 7 of the Extradition Act, these conditions have to be satisfied: (1) the offence must be an extraditable one, that is, one of those mentioned in the first Schedule to the Act; (2) the accused must not be an European British subject; and (3) the offence must have been committed by the accused in the territory of the Native State concerned. Unless all these three conditions are fulfilled, the issue of a warrant by the Political Agent is unauthorized, and the arrest in pursuance of such warrant illegal. In such a case the High Court has power to interfere and quash the proceedings under its powers under S. 491, Cr. P. Code and to order the arrested person to be set at liberty. ———S 7—Warrant addressed to District Magistrate —Endorsement to police—Arrest—Interference by High Court.

The Extradition Act does not authorize the District Magistrate himself to inquire into the legality, much less the propriety of the warrant and then to refuse to execute it on the ground that in his opinion the warrant had been wrongly issued. The endorsement of the District Magistrate on the extradition warrant forwarding it to the Superintendent of Police or the arrest made under the directions of the Superintendent of Police would therefore not be any proceeding of an inferior Criminal Court and would merely be an executive act, and the High Court would therefore not have jurisdiction to interfere with the proceeding on the revisional side. ———S. 7—Warrant—Legality—Conditions.

Under S. 7 there are three conditions precedent for the issue of a legal warrant: (1) the offence must be an extradition offence, that is, one of those given in Sch. 1, Extradition Act, (2) the accused must not be a European British subject and (3) the offence must have been committed or must be supposed to have been committed by the accused in the territories of the State. Without all these three conditions being fulfilled, the Political Agent would have no authority to issue a warrant for the arrest of any person, who has either escaped into or is in British India, and the arrest of such a person in pursuance of such a warrant would be equally illegal. A Magistrate has power to issue a warrant under S. 10 of the Extradition Act when neither a warrant nor a requisition has been received. When that procedure is not followed, and when the arrest is effected on nothing except the order of a Magistrate, such arrest is illegal. Even if the arrest were by the police on their own responsibility, the provision in S. 23 must be followed and the detention must be made subject to the restrictions laid down by S. 10, otherwise the arrest and detention would be illegal and the person arrested and detained must be released on an application made by him under S. 491, Cr P. The Extradition Act is the law of the land, not so far as the third chapter is concerned to be applied for this or that country by Order in Council or by any special means. Where the authorities themselves are doubtful about the applicability of certain provisions of the Act, but the management act reasonably and show a genuine desire to meet any complaint and to rectify irregularities, and there is no absence of good faith, the launching of a test case in respect of technical infringements of the provisions of the Act is uncalled for, in view of the trivial character of the charges. It is not correct to say that the Factories Act affects only manual workers. The question whether a particular worker comes within the definition clauses of S. 2 of the Factories Act which are of a very wide application, and in whose case an exception could be claimed under S. 29, has to be settled by the Inspector of Factories, who is the constituted authority under the law to express the opinion whether that person holds a position of supervision or management, or is employed in a confidential capacity, as mentioned in S. 29, R. 59, and framed under the Act. All persons, not strictly coming within the exceptions, contemplated by S. 29 and those in whose cases there is no "opinion" of the Inspector entitling the manager to claim exemption, as contemplated by S. 28 are to be deemed as persons employed in the factory. ———S. 41 (a)—Occupier—Meaning of—Mukaddam—Duties of—Joint trial with manager—Validity of.

The word "occupier" denotes a person who is either a proprietor or otherwise entitled to be in possession of the factory and control its working. He may or may not actually occupy the building and even if he carries on the work through an agent he does not cease to be the occupier. He cannot therefore be any ony who is a mere servant charged with specific duties either in regard to the control of the machinery, workmen or office. A mukaddam is really a foreman of the operatives and a servant of the factory. He is neither a managing agent nor a person authorized to represent the occupier. He cannot therefore be regarded as an occupier or manager. He cannot be tried jointly with the manager for an offence under S. 41 (a) of the Act but can be tried under S. 42 (1) on the complaint of the manager. ———Claim to—Burden of proof—Tidal and navigable river.

Title to an exclusive fishery in a tidal, navigable river can be established by proving an express grant or by giving evidence that a grant though not capable of being produced will be presumed. Where the original grants are not forthcoming, resort must be had to secondary evidence of them or to the inference of legal origin to be drawn from long user. Where the plaintiff claims such a right, the burden is on him to show that the fishery has come to him under a valid and effectual grant from the Crown, which has been sustained by the continuous use and enjoyment of himself and his co sharers and his predecessors. 11 C. 434, Ref. ———Customary right to—Proof of—Right claimed on behalf of indefinite body—Reasonableness of.

In a suit for declaration of the plaintiff's rights to fishery and damages, it was found that the plaintiffs had a valid title derived from the grantee of an exclusive fishery from the Crown. The defendants, however, asserted they had a customary right to catch fish in the plaintiff's jalkar without paying rent. The evidence was that a large number of fishermen (defendants) caught fish, singly or in batches. Sometimes the plaintiffs realized rents and ocaasionally sued them successfully for rents or damages but owing to the vastness of the tract, most of them escaped payment of rents or tolls.

Held, that as a matter of law, the defendants could not be said to have established a customary right to fish; even if such a custom had been established, it was unreasonable since according to it, there would be no limitation to the number of persons entitled to enjoy it and an unlimited number of persons would appropriate the profits of private property, leaving nothing to the owner and further the subject-matter of the right would soon become exhausted. On the last ground, a profit a prendre cannot be acquired by custom. Where a several fishery is claimed by a private individual in a natural stream, the right claimed can be only over navigable rivers or those portions of a river which are navigable. A grant can confer on the person to fish only in natural water-courses and not in those made by the hand of man. There is difference between the case of a river shifting from its old bed, leaving there sheets of water having a regular connection with the new main channel, and the gase where a river divides itself, the volume of its waters still flowing down its old bed and the new channel is a non-navigable channel passing through the lands of private persons. In the former case, the sheets of water in its old bed will still be subject to the right of fishery of the persons having several fishery as long as the connection is maintained with the flowing river and that connection is not merely occasional due to an exceptional flood caused by a heavy rainfall or other temporary cause. In the latter case, the owner of fishery rights will have a right of fishing in the new channel only if the channel is navigable and not otherwise, as in the case of a river changing its course and bed and taking a new course, the extra channel formed is a new bed. Held, that the riparian proprietors from whom the defendants claim to have derived the right to fish in the done in question, who undoubtedly held the done when a 'blind stream' as their territorial fishery, have still their right unaffected when the done was converted into a flowing channel by the act of the District Board as the flowing channel is a non navigable one, and that the plaintiff can have also no right in the done as the current from the plaintiff's river was there introduced by an artificial excavation. FRAUD—Burden of proof.

It is a well-settled principle of law that those who allege fraud must prove it. (Khaja Mohammad Noor and Dhavle, JJ.) SABITRI THAKURAIN v. MRS. F.A. SAVI. 12 Pat. 359 = 6 I.R (Pat.) 17 = 145 I.C. 1 = 14 Pat L.T. (Sup.) 1 = A I.R. 1933 Pat. 306.

———Burden of proof.

In all cases of fraud which is not capable of proof by direct evidence, the Courts have to fall back upon inferences to be drawn from circumstances established by evidence. The party alleging fraud is nevertheless bound to establish it by cogent evidence, and suspicion cannot be accepted as proof. Unless therefore the proved circumstances are incompatible with the hypothesis of the person charged with fraud having acted in good faith, they cannot be accepted as affording sufficient proof of fraud. ———Compromise decree—Suit to set aside—Issue.

In a suit to set aside a compromise decree in a partition suit on the ground of fraud, the only issue for the Court is to see if the plaintiff has or has not established the allegation of fraud. The question whether the division effected by the decree was unequal or worked hardship on the plaintiff is not germane to the suit. (*Courtney Terrell, C. ———Criminal prosecution—What must be proved

In cases where fraud is alleged, it is absolutely essential that there should be clear evidence of intention to defraud or to cheat before the opposite party ought to be allowed to be harassed by a criminal prosecution. ———Decree—Ex parte decree—Suit to set aside—Fraud of co defendant, if sufficient.

The plaintiff brought a suit to set aside an ex parte decree passed against him and another in favour of the first defendant. He alleged that in that suit, the plaintiff (the first defendant herein) and the second defendant, the only contesting party in the prior suit had colluded and fraudulently consented to a decree operating to the prejudice of the present plaintiff.

Held, that the plaintiff having remained ex parte, he could not have been defrauded in any way by the first defendant; that if the second defendant in the previous suit had by means of any representation induced the plaintiff to remain ex parte and fraudulently consented to a decree, the first defendant was not responsible for it and so the ex parte decree could not be set aside. ———Decree—Setting aside suit—Decree on award.

A suit lies to set aside a decree passed on the basis of an award, on the ground that the decree had been obtained by fraud. And if the consent of a party to arbitration proceedings is obtained by fraud and if he is kept ignorant of the real nature of those proceedings, no distinction can be made between decrees based on awards and ordinary decrees. ———Decree—Suit to set aside—Burden of proof.

There is a presumption under S. 114, Ill. (e) of the Evidence Act that proceedings held and accepted by the Court are regular and true and so a party who asks that certain proceedings in Court should be set aside on the ground of fraud or irregularity and alleges that the processes were not executed, as they purport to have been must prove his allegations. ———Decree—Suit to set aside—Decree obtained in suit upon mortgage already discharged.

To bring a suit upon a discharged mortgage bond is to commit a fraud upon the Court and such fraud is extrinsic to the proceedings in the suit brought on such mortgage bond. Therefore a suit by a person aggrieved by the decree to declare the decree, so far as he is concerned, null and void and to have it set aside is maintainable. (Dunkley, J.) KO SU YA v. N. N. K. ———Decree—Suit to set aside—Nature of fraud necessary for.

In a suit to set aside a decree on the ground of fraud, the plaintiff must prove that the decree was obtained by some fraud practised upon the Court and that if it is not proved, he cannot succeed whether the original claim against him was true or false. 10 I.C. 905, Foll. ———Decree — Suit to set aside — Non service of summons on defendant.

If a plaintiff in an action gives a wrong address of the defendant, and takes no part in serving the summons on the defendant, the giving of the wrong address by itself would not prevent the defendant from appearing before the Court to defend the suit. The plaintiff cannot under those circumstances be charged with having deliberately suppressed the service of summons or having obtained an ex parte decree by fraud, even though he might have had some cause for suspecting that the service effected on the defendant might not have been good service. In a suit to set aside a decree on the ground that it was obtained by fraud, the plaintiff is bound to specify in his plaint, the facts which constitute the fraud in a clear and definite manner. In order to entitle the plaintiff to succeed, the fraud alleged must be satisfactorily established and it must be proved how, when, where and in what way the fraud was committed, since a prior judgment cannot be upset on general allegations of fraud or collusion. ———Essentials—Intention to deceive and cause damage.

Fraud in respect of creditors involves an element of loss or injury of a substantial character and not merely inconvenience caused by delay in the realization of what is due. Circumstantial evidence is not only sufficient but, in many cases, is the only proof that can be adduced to establish fraud. Suspicions and surmises and conjectures are not permissible substitutes for those facts or those inferences, but that by no means requires that the very puzzling artifice or contrivance resorted to by one accused of fraud must necessarily be completely unravelled and cleared up and made plain before a verdict can be properly found against him. 28 C.W.N. 327 (P.C.), Rel. on. FRONTIER CRIMES REGULATION (III OF 1901), S. 7—Construction—Applicability—S. 337 (2) (a), Cr. P. Code, not modified.

The Frontier Crimes Regulation being a penal law, it must receive a construction which is favourable to the accused. Cl. 2 (a), S. 337, Cr. P. Code, confers a privilege on the accused of being tried by a superior Court and this privilege cannot be lightly taken away. Until and unless the wording of S. 7 Frontier Crimes Regulation, specifically takes away this privilege, a Court cannot, either by presumption or assumption, hold that an accused person has been deprived of it. S. 4 applies only to proceedings and trials under the regulation and does not modify the provisions of S. 337, Cr. P. Code, for the Frontier Province generally as regards trials held under the Cr. P. The inquiry by the Jirga was incomplete in respect of some of the most material points in dispute. The Deputy Commissioner, instead of postponing his final order till further inquiry had been made and findings recorded by the Jirga, accepted the findings given by the Jirga on some issues and wound up his order with the remark that "orders with respect to other issues will be passed, as soon as they are considered by the Jirga."

Held, that it is clear that this order of the Deputy Commissioner did not and could not amount to a decree It was merely an interlocutory order passed by him accepting the findings of the Jirga. A Civil Court is debarred from entertaining a suit only when the Deputy Commissioner, having referred the dispute in respect of the property in question to a Jirga, and the Jirga recorded a finding thereon, has either remanded the case so to the Jirga for a further finding or has referred the case to a second Jirga or has passed a decree in accordance with the finding of the Jirga or of not less than three fourths of the members thereof. ——S. 3, (21) and (40)—"Shall include"—Meaning

The expression "includes" or "shall include," is used in interpretation clauses in two senses. The ordinary and general sense in which it is used is to enlarge the meaning of the words or phrases occurring in the body of the statute; and when it is so used, these words or phrases must be construed as comprehending not only such things as they signify according to their natural import, but also those things which the interpretation clause declares that they shall include. This expression is also susceptible of another construction, which may become imperative, if the context of the Act is sufficient to show that it was not merely employed for the purpose of adding to the natural significance of the words or expression defined. It may be equivalent to "mean and include" and in that case it may afford an exhaustive explanation of the meaning, which for the purposes of the Act must invariably be attached to those words or expression. The expression in S. 3, Cls. (21) and (40) is used in the restricted sense as equivalent to mean and include. (*Rupchand, J. C. and Mehta, A. Where a second trial results in a sentence of imprisonment or transportation, the provisions of S. 26 can be complied with merely by the direction that such imprisonment or transportation shall run concurrently with that imposed in the previous case; in the case of a death sentence, there can be no question of a concurrent sentence, for the sentence itself automatically cancels the previous sentence of imprisonment. S. 63, Income tax Act, is to be read along with S. 27, General Clauses Act. The words "unless the contrary is proved" in S. 27 refer both to the service and the time. ———Ss. 30 and 6—Applicability—Temporary ordinances.

No doubt the General Clauses Act would certainly be applicable to the two Ordinances 2 and 10 of 1932, but S. 6 is applicable to case where a previous Ordinance has been "repealed" by a subsequent Ordinance or by a subsequent Act and would not necessarily apply to a case where a temporary Ordinance automatically expires after the period, during which it is in operation, is over. Hence although S. 30 makes the Act applicable to the Ordinances, S. 6 has no application to such temporary Ordinances. A.I.R. 1933 Cal. 280, Dist. (*Sulaiman, C. GOVT. OF INDIA ACT (1915), S. 72.

Under S. 72 of the Government of India Act, which authorizes the Governor-General in cases of emergency to promulgate Ordinances for the peace and good Government of British India, the Governor General alone is to be the sole Judge of whether the state of emergency exists and whether the Ordinance conduces to the peace and good government of British India, as contemplated by the section. His judgment is not subject to review by the Courts. The power given to the Governor-General by S. 72 is an absolute power, without any limits prescribed, except only that it cannot do what the Indian Legislature would be unable to do, although it is only to be used in extreme cases of necessity where the good government of India demands it. A person in the civil service of the Crown in India holds office during His Majesty's pleasure. He has however a right of action against the Crown if he is removed from service without a full enquiry complying with R. 55 of the Civil Services (Classification Control and Appeal) Rules. In order to assess the damage it must be seen what his position would have been if he had been replaced in his position as he was before his removal. If it is a certainty that he would be removed from his appointment even if an enquiry strictly following R. 55 were to be held, the damages which he is entitled to for the failure to follow the provisions of that rule must be nominal. The object and effect of S. 96 B of the Government of India Act and R. 55 of the Civil Services (Classification Control and Appeal) Rules is that while the Crown reserves to itself the right of dismissal at pleasure it is provided, in order to prevent high-handed action on behalf of its agents, that the Crown should only exercise its right of dismissal at pleasure, after the servant concerned has obtained the benefit of an enquiry into the circumstances in respect of which the Crown might or might not exercise its right of dismissal. For plain dismissal or removal from the service of the Crown per se the servant has no right of action against the Crown. He has, however, a right of action if he is removed without the provisions of R. 55 having substantially been complied with. (*Page, C. Nor can he claim damages for any remarks made by any official in connection with the dismissal. The damages for wrongful dismissal of a servant cannot include compensation for the manner of the dismissal, for his injured feelings, or for the loss he may sustain from the fact that the dismissal of itself makes it more difficult for him to obtain fresh employment, 1909 A.C. 488, Ref. to. A Police Sub-Inspector was first discharged on an invalid pension but was afterwards dismissed, with the consequence of his pension being withdrawn for misconduct prior to discharge. He sued the Secretary of State for a declaration that he was not liable to removal after his retirement and for damages.

Held, that though the dismissal of the Sub-Inspector by the Deputy Inspector-General, an authority lower in rank than the Inspector General by whom he was appointed, was not in accordance with the words of S. 96-B (1) of the Government of India Act, still the whole section being governed by its opening words "subject to the provisions of this Act and the rules made thereunder", the dismissal would not be contrary to the statute in so far as there was a new rule framed under the Act giving a Deputy Inspector-General power to dismiss as well as appoint a Sub Inspector. The dismissal could not be considered from the point of view of its having been a breach of contract with reference to S. 96 B (1). The dismissal had rather to be viewed as part of the order by which he had been deprived of his pension The damages prayed for, for the breach of contract set up, could only be for the loss of pension and the Sub-Inspector was debarred by the Pensions Act from bringing any suit that might affect his right to the pension. ——S. 96-B (1) and R. 14—Officer dismissed without enquiry—Right of suit—Public servants enquiries Act, S. 25.

A Reader in the Government Press, was dismissed from service without any enquiry. He sued the Secretary of State for damages for wrongful dismissal.

Held, he had no right of action, as R. 14 framed under the Government of India Act, imposing formalities like enquiry before dismissal of a civil servant was specifically without prejudice to the provision of the Public Servants Inquiries Act, S. 25, which says, "Nothing in this Act shall be construed to affect the authority of the Government for suspending or removing any public servant without an enquiry under this Act." When that was the case, it was not possible to say that the Government or the authority to whom it delegated its power in the matter could not, with reference to R. 14, dismiss its civil servants without any enquiry. That one was doing work, as a reader in a press, which could have been done by a private person did not make him any the less a public servant or limit the right of Government to dismiss him at its pleasure. The statutory rules gave him no right of suit, and the general rule was that no remedy could be taken but the particular remedy prescribed by the statute. ——S. 101 (4)—Constitution of High Court—Absence of requisite proportion due to temporary vacancy—Additional and officiating Judges—Whether the proviso to the rule applies.

At least in practice, the proviso to S. 101 has been interpreted so far as meaning that the Chief Justice must be a Barrister Judge and that one-third of the total strength of the permanent Judges including the Chief Justice must be Barristers, and one-third must be members of the Indian Civil Service. The proviso does not in express terms apply to Additional Judges, for it excludes them. A fortiori, the proviso does not apply to Officiating Judges appointed by the Local Government. So there is no defect at all if the Officiating Chief Justice happens to be a non-Barrister or an Officiating Judge a non-Barrister or non-Civilian Judge in place of Barrister or Civilian Judge, who has either retired or gone on short leave. There is a distinction between the constitution of a High Court which consists of one Chief Justiceship and a fixed number of Puisne Judgeships and the actual group of individual Judges, who for the time being constitute the High Court. If the constitution itself were altered and a Judgeship were abolished, which would disturb the requisite proportion, there would certainly be a defect in the constitution But if there be a temporary vacancy caused by the retirement, resignation or going on leave of a Chief Justice or Permanent Judge, the constitution, would not be illegal. The mere fact that a vacancy caused by the retirement of a Judge has not been filled up and there is no longer the requisite proportion (one-third) of the Barrister Judges, does not render the High Court illegally constituted so as to deprive the subsisting Judges of their ordinary jurisdiction. The Government of India Act, being an Act of the Imperial Parliament, cannot be controlled, and the powers conferred by S. 107 cannot be taken by the G.G. under S. 51 of the Emergency Powers Ordinance (II of 1932). The Special Courts eseablished under the Ordinance are "Courts subject to its appellate jurisdiction" because under S. 39 of the Ordinance, the High Court has power to hear appeals in certain cases. If there is a right of appeal in any case to the High Court, then the High Court can exercise the right of superin-

G. acting under S. 106 of the Government of India Act and the Letters Patent could have excluded all appellate Jurisdiction of the High Court in respect of Courts constituted under the Ordinance has no relevancy in considering the question of the existence of the power of superintendence, where in fact a limited power of entertaining appeals has been conferred under S. 39 of the Ordinance on the High Court, assuming—(but by no means deciding, in fact the contrary has been often held)—that if the appellate powers of the High Court had been totally excluded, the powers of superintendence would also have been similarly abrogated. S. 107 of the Government of India Act does not authorize the High Court to impose Court-fees on appeals in cases dealt with by the Court in the exercise of its ordinary civil jurisdiction. The section only refers to Courts which are subordinate to the High Court. The Original Side of the High Court is not a Subordinate Court but is an intergral part of the High Court itself. But the High Court has full power to regulate its procedure under Cl. 35 of the Letters Patent (Rangoon) and the power to make regulations for procedure necessarily includes imposition of fees and the collection of them. Where the High Court issues a notification for the levy of Court fees in respect of cases coming before the Original Side and appeals arising therefrom, it undoubtedly intends to exercise the powers vested in it and the fact that the notification purports to be made pursuant to the provisions of S. 107 (c) of the Government of India Act does not make any difference as to its legality as it is the operative part of the notification which matters. The kowl recited that the village was given in farm (khoti) together with a free grant of the arable uncultivated land (osik') land in the village, that the village is given without the Abkari revenue and provided inter alia. (i) "In the village some lands are uncultivated and trees are barren. And Government has rights over the said lands and trees and over the income thereof. Out of the same Government has retained some right mentioning the same in this kowl. Except that right the whole right has been granted to you. You should go on enjoying the same." (ii) "This kowl will not prejudice the rights of any one who may have in respect of the land or in respect of any (other) item "Bab" in the said village. And it should be clearly noted that this kowl will not enable you to exercise rights in respect of the items ("kalams") over which Government has no right at present. You will be entitled to exercise rights only in respect of those items ("kalams") over which the government has right and which are given in writing in this kowl (lease)."

Rice land once cultivated but subsequently given up or cultivable but uncultivated land being given in inam, and the remainder of the village, which means every part of it except the arable uncultivated land, being given in farm; and that the Abkari revenue alone was excepted, that the grant was of all revenues derivable from the village including profession tax and capitation tax, except Abkari, and not merely the agricultural revenue, and that the plaintiff was entitled to a royalty on the earth, stone and trees, which belonged to the Government before the grant. ———Construction—Sanad providing for performance of service by and enjoyment by grantee, sons and grandsons—Kabuliyat by grantee reciting liability for service and payment of rent—Stipulation to surrender possession on default in payment or removal from service—Conditional or burdened with service.

A grant of a village was made in 1852. The sanad of the grantor recited that the village was granted as baiswan (jagir) for reciting daily one chapter of Sribhagwat before Sri Saligram and that the grantee, his sons and grandsons should make the recitation and enjoy the village, including jup, kup (wells), boundary limits, trees, fisheries, etc. In 1856, the grantee executed a kabuliyat to the grantor, stating that he had been granted the village in lieu of service and that he had to pay Rs. 12-15-0 in cash every year, that he would pay the same in instalments, and that if the rent fell into arrear or in case of his removal from service, he would give up possession of the village,

Held, that the two documents must be read together, and that on a true construction the grant was not one

An inamdar was granted in 1902 by the Government under S. 15 of the Bombay Hereditary Offices Act, a Sanad under which the grantee agreed to pay the Government a fixed annual jodi in lieu of service in respect of certain lands which had been granted to his ancestors granted as inam for shet-sanadi service. In 1920, Government discontinued the service and ordered full assessment. The grantee contended that the lands were originally granted for police duties, that they were Jadid inams, and that he was entitled to receive the full assessment levied on the lands after the discontinuance of service, as against the Government.

Held, that the lands were Kadim lands and not Jadid inam lands, and that they were so treated in fixing the judi permanently at the time of the Sanad in 1902. (Wadia, J.) SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA v. RAJARAM. 155 I.C. 763=7 R.B. 465=36 Bom.L.R. 1055=A.I.R. 1935 Bom. 47.

The presumption in the case of foreshore is that the Crown is entitled to the foreshore between high and low watermark, but the presumption can be rebutted by the terms of a grant. Where the grant consisted of a whole village itself, including 'osik' land in it, not expressly excepting the foreshore, and the foreshore consisted not merely of stone and sandy tract, but of lands which had been regarded and assessed as "Khajan" and revenue-bearing land, and the grant conferred on the grantee all the rights of revenue possessed by the Government in the village.

Held, that the conclusion was irresistible that the whole of the foreshore in the village was included in the express words of the grant and that the foreshore fell within the class of "osik" in the grant, and lands comprised in the foreshore can be made the subject of

The extent of Gudimala Khandriga (a part of the village of Rameswaram in Godaveri District) was stated in the bhuband accounts of the village prior to 1858, to be 70 odd putties. In 1860 when the grant of the inam was confirmed, the extent was specified in the Inam Registers both in putties and in acres, viz, 70 odd putties or 560·75 acres. From at least 1860, the temple was in possession of the whole of Gudimala Khandrika and paid only Rs. 20 as quit rent for the entire inam. In the re-survey and re-settlement of 1901, the extent of the khandrika was in fact found to be 1837·40 acres. In 1917, the Board of Revenue resolved that the extent of the inam settled on the temple was only 560·79 acres and that for the excess, full assessment should be levied.

Held, that having regard to the boundaries of the inam specified in the statements of the kulkarni in 1859 the Inam Register prepared about 1860, the pechu accounts of 1866 confirmed by the Inam Commissioner in 1872, what was settled as inam was the whole village of gudimala khandrika and not only 560·79 acres and that the excess was not subject to full assessment. Held, that as it was nowhere stated in the sanad that the purpose of the grant was the maintenance of the festivals nor was any stipulation made as to the portion of the income if any, which should be allocated to the festivals as distinct from the expenses of the family, it was a personal grant and not one for the support of any religious institution and that it was alienable by the holder. In April, 1838, a sanad was issued to them which gave them the entire management of the village with a condition that they should recover the full land revenue and pay Government a lump sum for their share. The system of farming was later changed and the inamdar continued to pay ⅓ of the actual recoveries. The plaintiffs leased certain khar lands in the village on Mafi Istava terms. Subsequently there was default in payment of assessment and the lands were sold subject to the conditions of the kowle. The alienee sold his interest to the defendants and they paid rent for some time and later on relinquished the tenancy. The plaintiffs having sued them to recover rent.

Held, (1) that the defendants had acquired the right of a permanent tenant under the kowle and the payment agreed upon was rent and not assessment ; (2) that the defendants being tenants, S. 217 of the Bombay Land Revenue Act did not apply to them ; (3) the tenants continued to be tenants in spite of the relinquishment and in spite of the entry of their names in Government records as khetadars they were bound to pay rent in kind and the landlord could not claim anything more. GRANT—Service grant.

By a sanad dated 1704 the Chief of Bavda was granted by the Maharaja of Satara, the Sardeshmuki right, i.e., the right to collect Government dues in certain villages and to take two per cent. of the collections. This right was recognized and continued by the British Government. In 1889 the basis of payment was permanently fixed at the average five years' receipts, by way of commutation, the Government collecting the revenue directly. Subsequently there were survey and revision survey by which the revenue rose but the amount received by the plaintiff remained unaltered. The plaintiff sued for a declaration that he was entitled to two per cent. on the actual revenue and not merely on the old assessment.

Held, that the provisions of the Bombay Summary Settlement Act (VII of 1863) did not apply to the fixing of the basis of payment, that he was under the sanad granted two per cent. on the Diwan Dast, which is the Government assessment, whatever it might be, and that he was, therefore, entitled to a decree (Baker and Nanavati, JJ.) PARASHRAM MADHAVRAO v. SECRETARY OF STATE. I.R. 1932 Bom 539 139 I.C. 796 34 Bom. ———Negligence of guardian — Order passed by Revenue Court—Right of minor to avoid.

A right to avoid a judgment on the ground of undue influence or fraud just as much as a right to avoid a contract on those grounds is a substantive right because the binding character of the transaction itself is impugned. It is not a mere matter of procedure or rule of evidence. It therefore exists independently of S. 44 of the Evidence Act. There is nothing in S. 44 or S. 2, Evidence Act, which precludes the plaintiffs from proving that a judgment previously obtained had been obtained by negligence of the guardian. The real basis of the binding character of a decree against a minor is the fact of his having been duly represented by a proper person, and not the mere existence of any formal order appointing a guardian for him. Even when there is such an order, if the guardian does not properly represent him, the decree would not be binding. On the other hand, even if there be any defect in the formal appointment of a guardian, the decree would be binding upon him, if he is sufficiently represented and his interests are well protected. Even where a guardian has been formally appointed, but he is grossly negligent in his duties, he ceases to represent the minor properly and effectively, and the result is the same as if no proper guardian had been in existence. It is the duty of the Court to see that the guardian appointed is a proper person who would safeguard the interest of the minor. If therefore the guardian ceases to take any interest in the case or is grossly negligent so as to sacrifice the interest of the minor, it cannot be said that the minor is still properly represented in the litigation. Wilful and wanton neglect on the part of the guardian disqualifies him. This also therefore appears to be a basis on which the avoidance of a decree against the minor can be allowed. The petitioners (plaintiffs) sued three brothers to recover some money due in respect of a deposit made with their deceased father. The 1st defendant was a major and the other two were minors. Plaintiffs applied for the appointment of a guardian proposing first the mother and on her declining, the brother (the 1st defendant), who agreed to act as guardian and was appointed accordingly. In the suit, he took time to file the written statement but afterwards did not at all make a defence either for himself or on behalf of his minor brothers and the suit was decreed ex parte. On the allegation that the 1st defendant had failed in his duties as a guardian and that accordingly the mother had applied to be made a guardian and at the same time application was made to set aside the ex parte decree.

Held, that the finding of the lower Court that the 1st defendant had betrayed his trust as guardian in not having filed a written statement and leaving the hearing to proceed ex parte, was sufficient to bring the case within the terms of O. 9, R. 13, C. There is nothing in the Guardian and Wards Act which debars a Court from appointing a guardian who is not residing within the jurisdiction of the Court to which an application is made. Under S. 7 a Court will appoint a guardian whenever it is satisfied, that it is for the welfare of the minor that an order should be made. S. 39, Cl. (h), does not imply that a person applying for appointment must be residing within the jurisdiction of the Court to which the application is made. What Cl. (h) means is that in certain cases, ceasing to live within the jurisdiction of the Court which made the order of appointment may be ground for the removal of the guardian from his office and no more. The only duty cast on the Court under the Act is to appoint the best person to act as guardian regardless of his place of residence. A.I.R. 1914 All. 541, Expl. GUARDIAN AND WARDS ACT (1890), S. 25.

The language of the section obviously implies that when any of the three contingencies mentioned in the sub-clauses exist there is no authority in the Court to appoint or declare a guardian of the person of the minor at all; that is to say, the jurisdiction of the Court conferred upon it by S. 17 to appoint or declare a guardian is ousted, where the case is covered by S. 19. The section means not only that in the presence of the husband or the father, no one else should be given preference, when either of them is fit to be appointed the guardian, but on its language, it even ousts the jurisdiction of the Court altogether and prevents it from appointing even the husband or the father as the guardian when both of them are not unfit to the guardian. The legislature did not intend to settle the competition that may arise under the personal law governing the minor between the husband and the father of the minor. For the purposes of S. 25 of the Guardian and Wards Act, it is not really necessary that the applicant should be a lawful guardian under the personal law. The application can be made by any person having the care of the person of the minor. The father of an illegitimate son who had the care of his person has, therefore, a locus standi to maintain a petition under the section. The petition must be decided on equitable considerations, the sole criterion for decision being the welfare of the minor. (Bhide, J.) MT. ———S. 25—Application by husband for custody of minor wife—Considerations.

The leading principle in dealing with a minor under the Guardian and Wards Act is to look to the interests of the minor himself. If those interests are not affected in any way, it then may be considered whether any other person has, under the law to which the minor is subject, certain rights of custody or so forth. But those rights in other persons cannot be enforced unless the well-being of the minor is not affected by such enforcement. Where the husband was found to have ill-treated his minor wife and the girl was living quite happy with her father,

Where a minor girl was allowed by her father to reside with her maternal grandmother, the latter is only the custodian of the girl by the leave and license of the father and the constructive custody is still with the father. If the grandmother had no right of hizanat and no right to guardianship, her refusal to return the girl to the father on being demanded to do so, amounts to 'removal from the custody of the guardian' and the father is competent to apply under S. 25. ———S. 25—Hindu girl in custody of mother in-law after husband's death—Order for delivery to father—Legality.

Under Hindu Law, the father of a minor girl ceases to be the guardian of her person as soon as she is married. On the death of her husband, this right does not revive in favour of the father, but devolves upon the husband's relations. Where therefore at the time of the application under S. 25 by the father, the girl was in custody of her natural guardian, the mother in-law, it cannot possibly be said that she had been removed from lawful custody, and the order for the delivery of the minor to her father under S. 25 is illegal. A Hindu father is the natural guardian of his children during their minority, and has prima facie a paramount right to their custody, and must be given such custody unless he is unfit or there are other circumstances. But the welfare of the minor child is a very important matter for consideration and the interests and welfare of the minor are sometimes even paramount to the rights of the father. A minor girl about one year old, was on her mother's death taken to live with her maternal uncles with the consent of her father who took a second wife and had by her four children. She remained with her uncles ever since until she was 13 years of age and was fondly brought up and well-cared for by her uncles and grandmother. The father did not show the slightest interest in her welfare till then, but suddenly applied for her custody under S. 25 of the Guardian and Wards Act. The minor girl showed her preference clearly in favour of remaining with her uncles, and it also appeared that the petition made by the father was not bona fide but out of spite and grudge against the maternal uncles.

Held, that the minor girl of 13 years was capable of forming a good opinion on the matter and that the interests and welfare of the minor demanded that she should remain where she was and the father's petition should be refused. ———S. 25—Minor child—Father's right to custody—Discretion of Court—Considerations—Delay in applying—Effect.

The father is the natural guardian of his minor child and has a right to claim custody of the child, but such right can be defeated if the Court thinks it better in the minor's interests to leave him in another's custody. In determining the minor's welfare, the question whether the application for custody is bona fide or not should be considered. If it is not bona fide, that is a reason for not disturbing the existing custody. The Court may in that connection take into account the failure on the part of the father to take steps over a long period to get custody of the minor. Another consideration is whether he is a fit person for the minor to be returned to. The fact that the father ill-treated the minor's mother and was about to marry a second wife will also count against him, especially when his application is belated, made after the lapse of a long time. ———S. 25—Petition by father for custody of minor girl—Minor living with grand-parents for several years—Considerations.

Although, according to Hindu Law, a father is the natural guardian of his children during their minority and has, therefore, a paramount right to the custody of his children, yet each case must depend upon its own circumstances and the right of the father is liable to be defeated where it is shown that it is better in the interests of the minor and for its welfare that it should remain where it is. If a minor girl has for many years from a tender age lived with grandparents or other near relatives and has been well cared for, and during that time, the minor's father has shown a lack of interest in the minor, these are circumstances of very great importance and bear both upon the question of the interests and welfare of the minor and on the bona fides of the petition by the father for the custody of his minor girl.
